DANIELS URGES BIG NAVY PROGRAM AS HELP TO PEACE

Says Wilson Approves Building Plan Which Will Aid at Paris Conference.

WOULD EQUAL BRITISH NAVY

Tells House Committee America Must Bend All Energy if Armaments Are Not Limited.

HEAVY CUTS IN ESTIMATES

$2,664,307,000 Total Is Reduced to $975,903,621—Enlisted Personnel of 250,000.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—Secretary Daniels, testifying before the House Naval Affairs Committee today in advocacy of the new three-year naval building program to cost $600,000,000, asserted that this nation desired to enter the Paris Peace Conference with the assurance from Congress that the American Navy would be enlarged to a size commensurate with that of the greatest naval power.

Mr. Daniels explained that the new three-year program which President Wilson, he, and the General Board of the Navy wished Congress to adopt this session was approved by the President after the signing of the armistice. This program, when completed, would go a long way toward putting the American Navy close to that of England.

It was evident from Mr. Daniels's testimony that if the Peace Conference should declare for a reduction or limitation of naval armament the new American naval building program could be modified or suspended.

"I may say that you cannot do anything in the world which would so strengthen this country's position in the Peace Conference," said Mr. Daniels, "as to authorize this enlarged naval program. Before I wrote my annual report I took up the matter of a big building program with the President, and then, later, after the armistice was signed, I spoke to him again on this subject. He very earnestly urges that this program be adopted. Nothing would so aid him in the Peace Conference as Congress's authorization of a big navy."

New Ships Asked For.

The new program recommended by Secretary Daniels and the General Board of the Navy calls for the building of 10 first-class battleships, 6 battle cruisers, 10 scout cruisers, and 130 small craft. It is estimated that such a program would place the United States on the same relative footing with Great Britain, giving this country, with the vessels now building, 62 first-class battleships, while England has 61 at present in commission.

It is the desire of Secretary Daniels and the navy officials to have a navy which will be as large as that of any other country, not only for defensive purposes but for policing in case a League of Nations to enforce peace is created at the Versailles conference.

"What if, unhappily, the Peace Conference should fail to come to an agreement upon a plan for disarmament?" asked Mr. Daniels. "Suppose the powers do not agree to curtail armament. Then it is entirely obvious to all that the United States, if she is to realize her destiny as a leader of democratic impulse, if she is to play her proper part, as she, hand in hand, with her incomparable allies has played it in this war, in the protection of small nations, the preservation of the freedom of the seas and for the world at large, must have a navy that will be as powerful as that of any nation in the world.

"It is my firm conviction that if the Conference at Versailles does not result in a general agreement to put an end to naval building on the part of all nations, then the United States must bend her will and bend her energies, must give her men and give her money to the task of the creation of incomparably the greatest navy in the world.

Duty of United States.

"She has no designs upon the territory, or the trade, of any other nation, or group of nations. But she is pledged to the support of the Monroe Doctrine. She is pledged to the protection of the weak, wherever they may suffer threats. She is incomparably rich, incomparably strong in natural resources. If need be, she must be incomparably strong in defense against aggressors and in offense against evildoers."

While the signing of the armistice naturally brought a reduction by the Navy Department in its estimates for the next fiscal year, Secretary Daniels declined to change his recommendations for the new naval building program. For the next fiscal year, however, he merely asks for authorization to expend $55,000,000 on the new program, which amount he intends to use for the construction of two battleships.

The original estimates submitted to Congress asked for an appropriation for the navy of $2,644,307,046.05. These were prepared at a time when it was thought that the war would continue another year. Since the signing of the armistice, the estimates have been re-

Forbids Germans to Give Arms to Bolsheviki on East Front

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 30.—The German Army command, according to a dispatch from Berlin, has informed the commanders on the eastern front that there is a most strict prohibition against the giving up of arms and war materials by the Germans to the Bolsheviki.

The commanders in the east were informed that such action was a violation of the armistice agreement and might result in a resumption of hostilities.

HUGHES WON'T ACT WITH W. R. HEARST

Refuses Membership on Mayor's Committee and Replies Sharply to Hylan's Letter.

DR. VAN DYKE ALSO DECLINES

Representatives of Patriotic Societies to Arrange for a Mass Meeting of Protest.

Charles Evans Hughes, Dr. Henry van Dyke, and William Allen Butler, President of the Lawyers' Club, yesterday added their names to the list of prominent citizens refusing to serve with William Randolph Hearst as members of the Mayor's official committee to welcome the homecoming soldiers and sailors, and gave out their letters of refusal, in which they said that their sole reason for declination was the membership of Mr. Hearst.

A definite move for an organized protest also was taken yesterday when the representatives of ten patriotic and civic societies met at the Hotel Belmont to arrange for a mass meeting before Jan. 12, and to consider plans for constituting themselves as a general citizens' committee of welcome, if the Mayor persisted in his refusal to ask the withdrawal of Mr. Hearst as Chairman of the Sub-Committee on Military Affairs in charge of the arrangements for greeting the American soldiers returning from France. The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity and a volunteer army chaplain; the Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman of Temple Emanu-el, and several others who had resigned from the Soldiers' Welcome Committee because of the appointment of Mr. Hearst, attended the meeting, as well as W. M. K. Olcott, who said he remained a member of the committee because he desired to counteract the influence of Mr. Hearst.

After Mr. Hughes had asserted in his letter that the appointment of Mr. Hearst to a committee arranging for the commemoration of the valorous deeds of American soldiers had raised a question that could not be overlooked because the soldiers themselves could not fail to resent it, Mayor Hylan wrote that he thought that any feeling for the soldiers "must be very deep-seated" when personal feelings against one man would swerve any man from "duty to the soldier boys." Mr. Hughes replied that he thought that soldiers and civilians alike would resent the use of the city's official welcome to the soldiers and sailors "as a vehicle for a public testimonial to Mr. Hearst."

Dr. van Dyke, the former Minister to Holland, wrote that he thought that the recent revelations of the correspondence of Mr. Hearst by the Department of Justice in the Senatorial propaganda inquiry disqualified the publisher "for service on such a committee," and he added that the committee should be made up only of those "citizens whose patriotism is beyond suspicion and whose character is above reproach."

Hughes Declines to Serve.

The first letter of Mr. Hughes declining membership on the committee read:

New York, Dec. 20, 1918.

Grover A. Whalen, Secretary to the Mayor, New York.

Dear Sir—Your letter, asking me to serve as a member of the Committee of Welcome to Homecoming Troops, was received during my absence from the city. I greatly regret that I cannot accept the appointment, as it would have given me great pleasure to have had a share in extending this welcome on behalf of the city. But I understand that William Randolph Hearst has been appointed a member of the committee, and his prominent activity in connection with the city's commemoration of the heroic deeds of our men has raised a question which cannot be ignored. I regard this relation of Mr. Hearst to the city's welcome as most unsuitable. Our men cannot fail to resent it, and I desire to record my own protest against it by declining to serve on the committee.

Sincerely yours,
CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mayor Hylan's letter in reply to Mr. Hughes follows:

Mr. Charles E. Hughes, 96 Broadway, New York City.

Dear Sir: Your letter, in which you say, "It would have given me great pleasure to have had a share in extending this welcome on behalf of the city, but I understand William Randolph Hearst has been appointed a member of the committee," received.

Your pleasure certainly must have been very deep-seated for the homecoming troops, when you would allow

EBERT DECLARES ARMY WILL STOP BERLIN DISORDER

German Ministry Now Fully Backed in Policy of Force, Premier Says.

NEW MEN IN THE CABINET

APPEAL TO COUNCIL FAILED

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Dec. 30, (via Copenhagen.)—Premier Ebert received THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent today after the joint meeting of the People's Commissioners and the Central Council, and told him that henceforth any crime against the public peace, by whomsoever committed, would be punished unrelentingly, according to the letter of the law.

"The People's Commissioners have now the full and unreserved support of the Central Council, the members of which were elected by soldiers, sailors, peasants, and workers," he said, "and they will fearlessly carry out their task of preserving law and order throughout Germany, and especially in Berlin."

"Then Berlin in future will be spared events such as those of the 'Red Christmas'?" inquired THE TIMES correspondent.

"We cannot, of course, protect Berlin against the Liebknecht-Spartacide harlequinades," was the reply, "but we shall certainly prevent henceforth all attempts at lawlessness in every form, if necessary by force of arms."

"Would that mean that in case of the repetition of any unlawful action on the part of sailors, soldiers, or citizens the People's Commissioners would suppress them by force of arms, even at the cost of life?" I asked.

"Even by force of arms and with all the attending consequences," was Ebert's answer, "much as we republican Germans abominate bloodshed. Shooting at soldiers, Government emissaries, or people, and destroying public property, are crimes which the Social Democratic Republic regards no more lightly than any other State, and will be dealt with accordingly."

Power to Retain Troops.

"And how will these principles be enforced?" was the next question.

"The Central Council," the Premier replied, "has given us full power to retain as large a force of soldiers under arms as we consider necessary, and to dismiss any body or formation. We shall not tolerate a few ruffians bullying the whole community and contaminating what is left of our military forces."

"Then, if in future sailors or soldiers rebel against the Government's orders," I inquired, "they will be dealt with like criminals in any other country?"

"Like such in any liberally governed country," answered Ebert. "Soldiers and sailors who turn traitors to their country must suffer the severest penalty. Even in the moderate armed forces, which do not answer our requirements, we shall, of course, only retain men of unquestionable loyalty to the republican Government and at once dismiss all others."

Independents Put Eight Questions.

Dec. 29—Yesterday's joint session of the People's Commissioners and the Central Council ended after midnight with the resignation of three Independent Socialist members of the Cabinet, Haase, Dittmann, and Barth,

No Censoring of Peace News Is Likely, Says London Paper

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—The Daily Chronicle says it is now practically certain that there will be no censorship restrictions on reports from the Peace Conference at Versailles. Both the American and British Governments, it says, favor allowing the press of the world unfettered liberty in dealing with the discussions.

At the same time, it is quite possible that at the early meetings of the conference it will be decided that certain delicate subjects shall be regarded as of a confidential nature.

Special arrangements, The Chronicle continues, have been made for securing rapid transmission of conference news to all parts of the world

SMITH IS SWORN IN AS GOVERNOR

Gets His Election Certificate at Governor's Mansion as Birthday Present.

FAMILY MOVES TO ALBANY

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 30.—Governor-elect Alfred E. Smith this afternoon received his formal certificate of election from Secretary of State Hugo at the Executive Mansion. A few minutes later he took the oath of office, it being administered by Judge John W. Hogan of the Court of Appeals. The Governor-elect and his family were received at the mansion by Governor Whitman and Major Hoppin and a few personal friends of the Governor-elect.

When the certificate was presented to the new Chief Executive he looked it over and remarked: "That is the finest birthday present I ever received." Today was his forty-fifth birthday. It was passed around to Mrs. Smith and to Mrs. Catherine Smith, mother of the new Governor, and each one of the five children in turn scanned it. Although the Governor-elect is much improved, yet he is not well by any means. As soon as he had talked with newspaper men at the mansion he retired to his room, and gave instructions that he must not be disturbed.

It was nearly 3 o'clock when the Smith party arrived at the Union Station. Ex-Governor and Mrs. Martin H. Glynn met them, and all went to the Executive Mansion, which had been prepared for their arrival. In about a half hour word was sent from the Secretary of State's office that the State canvassers had finished their work, and that the certificate would be issued at once. The Governor-elect said he would be most happy to receive the certificate and the Secretary of State at the mansion, and, so it was arranged.

It did not take Arthur and Walter Smith, the youngest of the five Smith children, long to get acquainted in the neighborhood of the Executive Mansion. After their father had been sworn in, Walter was induced by Arthur, aged 12, to go out and "get acquainted." In 10 minutes some thirty boys about their ages were disporting themselves on the lawn of the grounds about the Executive Mansion. The great Dane Caesar, who also made the trip to Albany with the Smith family, came in for his share of attention. A photograph of the family was taken at the Mansion and powder was used. The dog started to run when the explosion came and dragged Walter for some distance until stronger hands caught hold of the leash. On the train coming from New York was State Controller Eugene M. Travis and Senator George L. Thompson of Kings Park. They both paid their respects to the Governor-elect.

Before he retired, Governor-elect Smith told newspaper men that he would make no announcement of appointments until Thursday. He had not decided as yet whether he would attend the inaugural ball which will be given in the State Armory Tuesday evening, but if he and Mrs. Smith do attend they will be in the box of former Governor and Mrs. Martin H. Glynn.

The State canvassers in session this afternoon announced that Governor-elect Smith had won by a plurality of 14,842 votes, according to the complete tabulation of the votes cast at the general

Ex-Crown Prince's Son Said to Be Hidden by German Monarchists as Head of Dynasty

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Dec. 30.—A Berlin correspondent informs me that Prince Wilhelm, the German ex-Crown Prince's eldest son, was kidnapped by Prussian monarchist officers at Potsdam soon after the return of the Guard regiments to Berlin and has been kept hidden by them ever since. The correspondent says that all efforts by the Berlin Government to discover the young Prince's place of concealment have proved unavailing.

The hopes and intrigues of the Prussian Junkers are now said to be centred in this Prince, who is a boy of 13. Not being of age, he cannot legally abdicate, nor can any one else renounce his rights to the Prussian throne for him. This lad is therefore, after his father's and grandfather's abdication, from a purely legal point of view, today King of Prussia.

The Prussian monarchists are said to be holding him concealed in order to be able to produce him at an opportune moment and rally all the supporters of the monarchy around him. Crown Princess Cecilie, who is said to have given tacit consent to her son's abduction, is still in Potsdam with her younger children.

The correspondent adds that in his opinion Bolshevism and monarchism will soon be grappling in mortal struggle in Prussia and will sweep aside or absorb all other political parties, the present Government and the bourgeois classes being too weak to cope successfully either with Liebknecht or Reventlow.

WILSON FOR WORLD LEAGUE OR NONE; FRANCE TO BACK BRITISH SEA POLICY; CLEMENCEAU SAYS WILSON APPROVES

CLEMENCEAU TELLS POLICY

WORKING FOR FULL ACCORD

DEFIES FOES IN CHAMBER

Expresses Willingness to Resign, and Gets a Vote of Confidence by 380 to 134.

PARIS, Dec. 30.—Premier Clemenceau won another victory in the Chamber of Deputies last night after a stormy debate in which he indicated his adherence to the "old system of alliances called 'the balance of power,'" and challenged his opponents by telling the Chamber that now was the time to change pilots if it wanted to. The Deputies gave him a vote of confidence by 380 to 134.

The Premier explained the peace situation as it concerned France, Great Britain, and the United States. He made it plain that it was his intention to support Great Britain on the question of the freedom of the seas, and declared that his attitude in this matter was approved by President Wilson. His conversations with the latter, he said, had been profitable, although "I should not be telling the truth if I said I had always been in agreement with him on all points."

Unified Socialists Alone Dissatisfied.

In summing up his argument for full confidence and the exercise of patience by the Chamber, the Premier declared:

"There will be claims to be set forth and others which will have to be given up. If I mounted the rostrum to elaborate the subject I would be the worst Premier in Europe. That does not mean we are not working hard to prepare a line of action for the Peace Congress."

It was indicated by the Premier that the formation of a League of Nations might be carried out coincidentally with the drafting of the treaty of peace. M. Renaudel, Socialist, brought about this statement by expressing his regret that the Allies had decided not to organize the league until after peace had been declared.

"Nothing of the sort," was the answer of M. Clemenceau.

"Whether this Chamber gives me a vote of confidence or not, I am ready to resign office," he continued. "If you have a minute's hesitation, now is the time to change your pilot. You cannot do it when we are under way."

Replying to charges made by Albert Thomas, Socialist leader, that he had kept the Chamber without information, Premier Clemenceau said:

"The question of peace is a tremendous problem. It is a question which is one of the most difficult ever submitted to the nation at any time. In a few days a conference of delegates will meet at Paris which will settle the fate of nations in all parts of the world.

"People say: 'Premier Lloyd George has spoken, President Wilson has spoken, but you have said nothing.' I have given explanations whenever you have asked me. But it isn't because Mr. Lloyd George has spoken, or because Mr. Wilson has arrived from America with elevated thoughts that I am obliged to explain myself and keep running to the Speaker's rostrum.

"France was in an especially difficult situation. It was the country nearest Germany. America was far away and took her time to come into the war. England came at once at the call of Mr. Asquith. We suffered and fought; our men were mowed down and our towns and villages were destroyed.

"There is an old system of alliances called the 'balance of power.' It seems to be condemned nowadays, but if such a balance had preceded the war; if England, the United States, France, and Italy had agreed, say, that whoever attacked one of them attacked the whole world, the

Allies and Wilson in Full Accord, Says Pichon; New Order Must Be Set Up on President's Lines

PARIS, Dec. 30, (Associated Press.)—Stephen Pichon, the Foreign Minister, said to The Associated Press today:

"You asked me in what spirit the French Government is preparing to participate in the peace negotiations. It is agreeable and easy for me to reply that the ideal which sustained us during the war is guiding us effectively on the eve of peace. This defines our policy.

"We have been attacked: We want security. We have been despoiled: We want restitution. We have been devastated: We want reparation.

"But that which we asked for ourselves, we demand for all, and hence are closely in accord with President Wilson. We intend that peace, in erasing the effects of the German crime, shall bring to all peoples the certainty that this crime will not be renewed."

M. Pichon, while apparently fatigued from the eighteen hours' session in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday, made these statements with great energy.

"In order to achieve this," he continued, "the world must be constituted on a new basis. The basic points you know. President Wilson has expressed them; we have adhered to them.

"Rumors of suspicious origin have attempted in the last two weeks to lead one to the belief that notable differences existed between the Allies on the conception of peace. In order to dispel doubts and to bring forth the truth, I cannot do better than to appropriate the words spoken in London by your President, and to declare that the exchanges of views which have just taken place between him and the allied Governments have proved the complete accord regarding the meaning and purpose of their duty for the accomplishment of which we have gathered.

"Together we have saved the world's democracy, together we will establish laws which will record in peace the immortal principles for which our soldiers died. The voices from the grave dictate our duty to the living, and we are jointly and wholeheartedly ready to fulfill it."

President's Speech of Acceptance of Freedom of City of Manchester

He Sees in the Common Devotion to Right the Bond Which Is to Unite All Nations—Wants a Covenant Declaring the Signatories Friends of Mankind.

MANCHESTER, Dec. 30.—Replying to the Lord Mayor's address today in presenting to him the freedom of the city, President Wilson said:

"My Lord Mayor, Ladies and Gentlemen, perhaps I may be permitted to add fellowcitizens—You have made me feel in a way that is deeply delightful the generous welcome which you have accorded me, and back of it I know there lies the same sort of feeling for the great people whom I have the privilege of representing.

"There is a feeling of cordiality, fraternity and friendship between the two great nations, and as I have gone from place to place and been made everywhere to feel the pulse of sympathy that is now beating between us I have been led to some very serious thoughts as to what the basis of it all is. For I think you will agree with me that friendship is not a mere sentiment—patriotism is not a mere sentiment. It is based upon a principle, upon the principle that leads a man to give more than he demands.

"Similarly, friendship is based not merely upon affection, but upon common service. The man is not your friend who is not willing to serve you, and you are not his friend unless you are willing to serve him. And out of that impulse of common interest and desire of common service arises that noble feeling which we consecrate as friendship.

"And so it does seem to me that the theme that we must have in our minds now in this great day of settlement is the theme of common interest and the determination of what it is that is our common interest. You know that heretofore the world has been governed, or at any rate the attempt has been made to govern it, by partnerships of interest, and that they have broken down. Interest does not bind men together. Interest separates men. For, the moment there is the slightest departure from the nice adjustment of interests, then jealousies begin to spring up. There is only one thing that can bind peoples together, and that is common devotion to right.

"Ever since the history of liberty began men have talked about their rights, and it has taken several hundred years to make them perceive that the principal condition of right is duty, and that unless a man performs his full duty he is entitled to no right. It is a fine co-relation of the influence of duty that right is the equipoise and balance of society.

"And, so, when we analyze the present situation and the future that we now have to mold and control, it seems to me there is no other thought than that that can guide us. You know that the United States has always felt from the very beginning of her story that she must keep herself separate from any kind of connection with European politics. I want to say very frankly to you that she is not now interested in European politics, but she is interested in the partnership of right between America and Europe. If the future had nothing for us but a new attempt to keep the world at a right poise by a balance of power the United States would take no interest, because she will join no combination of power which is not a combination of all of us. She is not interested merely in the peace of Europe, but in the peace of the world.

"Therefore it seems to me that in the settlement which is just ahead of us something more delicate and difficult than was ever attempted before has to be accomplished—a genuine concert of mind and of purpose. But, while it is difficult, there is an element present that makes it easy. Never before in the history of the world, I believe, has there been such a keen international consciousness as there is now.

"There is a great voice of humanity abroad in the world just now which he who cannot hear is deaf. There is a great compulsion of the common conscience now in existence which if any statesman resist, will gain for him the most unenviable eminence in history. We are not obeying the mandate of parties or of politics. We are obeying the mandate of humanity.

"That is the reason why it seems to me that the things that are most often in our minds are the least significant. I am not hopeful that the individual items of the settlement which we are about to attempt will be altogether satisfactory. One has only to apply his mind to any one of the questions of boundary and of altered sovereignty and of racial aspirations to do something more than conjecture that there is no man and no body of men who know just how they ought to be settled; and yet if we are to make unsatisfactory settlements we must see to it that they are rendered more and more satisfactory by the subsequent adjustments which are made possible. We must provide the machinery for readjustments in order that we have the machinery of goodwill and friendship.

"Friendship must have a machinery. If I cannot correspond with you, if I cannot learn your minds, if I cannot co-operate with you, I cannot be your friend; and if the world is to remain a body of friends, it must have the means of friendship, the means of constant friendly intercourse, the means for constant watchfulness over the common interests.

"That makes it necessary to make some great effort to have with one another an easy and constant method of conference, so that troubles may be taken when they are little and not allowed to grow until they are big. I never thought I had a big difference with a man that I did not find when I came into conference with him that, after all, it was rather a little difference, and that if we were frank with one another and did not too much stand upon that great enemy of mankind which is called pride, we could come together.

"It is the wish to come together that is more than half of the process. It is a doctrine which ought to be easy of comprehension in a great commercial centre like this. You cannot trade with a man who suspects you. You cannot establish commercial and industrial relations with those who do not trust you. Good-will is the forerunner of trade. Good-will is the foundation of trade, and trade is the great amicable instrument of the world on that account.

"I felt, before I came here, at home in Manchester, because Manchester has so many of the characteristics of our great American cities. I was reminded of an anecdote of a humorous fellow-countryman of mine who was sitting at luncheon in his club one day when a man whom he did not like particularly came up and slapped him on the shoulders and said:

"'Hello, Ollie! How are you?'

"He looked at him coldly and said:

"'I don't know your face, and I don't know your name, but your manners are very familiar.'

"I don't know your name, but your manners are very familiar, and very delightfully familiar, so that I felt that in the community of interest and understanding which is established in great currents of trade we are enabled to see international processes perhaps better than they can be seen by others. I take it I am not far from right in supposing that that is the reason why Manchester has been the centre of the great forward-looking sentiments of men who had the instincts of large planning, not merely for the city itself, but for the Kingdom and the Empire and the world. And with that outlook we can be sure we can go shoulder and shoulder together.

"I wish it were possible for us to do something like some of my very stern ancestors did, for among my ancestors are those very determined persons who were known as the Covenanters. I wish we could, not for Great Britain and the United States, but for France, for Italy and the world, enter into a great league and covenant declaring ourselves first of all friends of mankind and uniting ourselves together for the maintenance of the triumph of right."

MIDLANDS ACCLAIM WILSON

INTIMATE NOTE IN WELCOME

BUSY FIVE HOURS IN CITY

President Makes Two Addresses and Visits Ship Canal—Then Returns to London.

MANCHESTER, Dec. 30, (Associated Press.)—The people of Manchester made President Wilson a freeman of their city today. They did more than that—they made him at home.

It seems as if all the men, women, and children of the town, and many from Lancashire at large, cheered the President at some stage of the crowded five hours in which he made a sort of democratic royal progress from one point of interest to another, which was strenuous enough and vast enough to exhaust the hardiest political campaigner.

The general atmosphere of the proceedings was intimate and friendly. Often the people got near enough to shake hands. Even the ceremony of conferring the freedom of the city had a tone of homely simplicity and seemed more like a college commencement than a formally staged ritual. The assembly sang "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," which could hardly have occurred at a state banquet or in the Guildhall.

It was a happy inspiration that led the Aldermen to throw open the largest hall in the city, instead of following custom by holding the ceremony in the Municipal Chamber. This by no means reduced the effect of the speech the President delivered.

His most important announcement—perhaps, to Englishmen, the most important he has made in England—that the United States would "join no combination of power which is not a combination of all of us," was not lost upon his hearers. No other European audience which he has faced has absorbed the President's utterances so eagerly, so understandingly, has so quickly responded to every important point. No other audience has resembled so noticeably the types of people to whom the President has been accustomed to speak at home.

Perhaps this was because Lancashire has contributed so many citizens to the United States and has such close industrial connections and follows American affairs with keener interest than most English counties.

The first item in the day's program was a drive to the famous docks which have made Manchester an inland port. Here the shipping extended a beflagged and vociferous greeting to the President, while the workmen from all the big warehouses and factories around hung from the windows and stood on the roofs.

Part of the drive was through the poorer districts, where a few of the children were too poor even to have bought American flags to wave.

Later the President made a brief appearance in the balcony of the Royal Exchange, where he spoke. Finally he took luncheon with 200 prominent men in the Midland Hotel, where he made an acknowledgment of Manchester's hospitality.

Only the weather was unfriendly today. It was gray and thick, with intervals of rain, but that is typical of the season in the Midlands, and it kept nobody indoors. Merchants, workmen, farmers, soldiers, with countless thousands of women and children stood in the streets and rushed from point to point for a glimpse of the President from another angle.

Shaking hands with the Lord Mayor and the Chief Constable on parting, the President said:

"Gentlemen, I congratulate you both. In all my travels I have not known arrangements to go on so smoothly. You have given me a happy time. My only regret is that it was not longer."

The last Manchester saw of the President he stood on the platform of the royal train, hat in hand, with his military aid holding the dark blue Presidential flag which had been presented by the people of France. The band played "The Star-Spangled Banner." The red-robed Lord Mayor and the blue-and-silver-bedecked Chief Constable were in the foreground, with an American guard of honor in the background, and there came a final tribute of cheers, stirring the flags which hung from the arches of the station.

The President received ovations for many miles along the railway from Manchester. The people had gathered along the line near the city and near the suburbs, and at various local cities on the route, and cheered vigorously as the train passed.

In a telegram regretting his inability to visit Southampton and receive the freedom of the city, the President expressed his cordial thanks for the honor, and said: "It would have been a great pleasure, but it is absolutely necessary for me to return to France on Tuesday."

A Democratic Welcome.

Manchester is in the great manufacturing midlands of England. President Wilson, when he arrived here last evening, found in this city a different atmosphere from that of London. There his time was absorbed, and necessarily, by formalities and official functions. Here there have been formal events, but with a more democratic air and on a more democratic scale. Here he found a hospitality which could not be warmer than that of London, but which brought him closer to the people.

There is a strong civic pride in this metropolis. Its people feel that their city was signally honored in being chosen from among other English cities, for the President's visit. The Lord Mayor is a selfmade man. His home, where Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were guests, is in a part of the Town Hall, where the Mayors live during their terms of office. It is a typical English home. The rest of the President's party was quartered at a nearby hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson sat down to an early family dinner last evening, and soon afterward retired to their apartment on the fourth floor, where they could rest with nothing more disturbing than the gongs of passing tramcars. The President's days in England have involved great physical strain, which was apparent to those near him last evening.

The most important feature of today was the presentation of the freedom of the city to Mr. Wilson, with an address by the President. What Manchester expected in the way of a speech is shown by the fact that thirty-five minutes were allotted to it. It was at first planned to hold the ceremony in the Municipal Chamber, which is the customary theatre for civic events, but, in response to public opinion, the old Free Trade Hall, which accommodates nearly 4,000 persons, was selected.

A Visit to the Ship Canal.

The most notable engineering works in Manchester are the ship canal and docks. The first activity of the day was an inspection of these.

Hours before the time set for the President's departure from the Town Hall crowds began to assemble in the square in front of the building, although the day was foggy in the early hours. The President was the first of his party to leave the building, wearing a long, yellow fur coat. As soon as the crowd saw him it started with shouts of "Wilson!" and "Hurrah for Wilson!"

The President, with the Lord Mayor, entered an open landau. The remainder of the party were in similar vehicles, Mrs. Wilson in the second one. She wore a purple hat, which was the one dash of color in the whole procession. The square and the statues in the centre of it were covered with people, and the windows surrounding it were black with them. It seemed as if all Manchester was taking the morning off to see the President.

The Presidential carriage proceeded to the end of the square, the other vehicles following closely. The crowd, tiring of cheering, contented itself with fluttering handkerchiefs as the carriages halted momentarily, and about the same time the American and British flags strung across the front of the Town Hall and from the poles along the curbing began to stand out in the freshening breeze.

When, after the brief halt, the President's carriage started again the crowds once more began cheering and shouting, the cheers continuing as the Presidential carriage, with mounted police before and behind it, passed along.

The President looked refreshed after his night's rest. Mrs. Wilson was radiant with her thanks when several persons threw big bouquets of flowers into her carriage, in which she was riding with the Lady Mayoress. She picked up the floral tributes and smilingly bowed her acknowledgments.

Sees a "Mystery Ship" in Action.

Mr. Wilson was received at the docks by Captain Bacon, Chairman of the Directors of the Ship Canal, and spent an hour on board a small steamer which cruised along the waterfront.

The inspection had several picturesque features. All the ships in the inland harbor were dressed brightly with flags, and the seamen cheered as the Presidential party passed by.

A British "mystery ship" and two German submarines were in the harbor. At first glance the "mystery ship" appeared to be an ordinary steamer, but as the President and his party approached the ship showed its real character. With all the rapidity and effect of a great conjuring trick the dingy vessel became a fully armed warship. Parts of the upper works fell down, and guns appeared with gun crews at their stations. The German submarines were manned by British sailors.

The trip to the ship canal was shortened because the Presidential party was behind its schedule, disappointing many of the seamen in the harbor who were prepared to greet the President.

Then came the chief ceremony in Free Trade Hall. This hall might have served as the model of many in American cities. It is suposed to hold 4,000 persons on the main floor and the balcony, which runs around the building. Today it was filled to capacity, with many persons standing, and an overflow jammed the streets for several blocks near the hall. The people outside stood in the cold and drizzling rain for an hour to see the President and cheered loudly when he appeared.

Inside the great hall all the spectators had been waiting some time when the Aldermen and city officials preceded the President on to the platform. The great organ at the end of the hall pealed forth "The Star-Spangled Banner" as the President appeared, and the crowd arose and cheered. The President, bowing and smiling, stood in the centre of the platform beside a table decorated with an American flag. Mrs. Wilson, who carried a large bouquet of pink roses, sat at the far end of the platform.

Others at the front of the platform were the Lord Mayor in the red robes of his office, the Clerk of the Council in his white wig, and the Chief Constable in a picturesque uniform trimmed with silver. The wife of the Lord Mayor stood next to the President.

The cheering lasted fully five minutes. The Clerk of the Council then read the address of welcome from the Council. Every mention of the United States or the name of the President brought forth cheers. The platform from which the President spoke was covered with red velvet, and flowers were banked in front of it.

The audience looked like an American audience, for most of those who heard the President's speech came from one of the great manufacturing districts of England. There were no military uniforms except those on the platform. The audience reminded American onlookers of a meeting in New England attended by business men and their wives.

The Lord Mayor's Eulogy.

In presenting the freedom of the city to President Wilson, the Lord Mayor said it afforded the City of Manchester supreme satisfaction to have on its roll the chief citizen of the American Republic, "foremost of all Americans who have ever visited England," and one whose clear utterances and earnest acts had been a proof of the real union of sentiment. This man, said the Lord Mayor, now stood before the audience as a living type and model of the friendship of the English-speaking races.

The bonds between England and America, the Lord Mayor added, had been riveted with great strength and made indestructible.

"When the complete history of the war is written," he said, "the world will comprehend more fully than it can today the stupendous character of the effort which the United States made to insure a right decision. The President has come among us equally resolved that the world shall henceforth be better and happier for a well-ordered peace."

The President, the Lord Mayor went on, was not a vain dreamer, for his dreams had been fulfilled. This was a fact which needed no further argument to support it, he said, when it was remembered how President Wilson's fourteen points had become within twelve months the real basis for a peace settlement and had been accepted by the enemies of the Allies as the preliminary for the permanent peace.

"We welcome him," the speaker said, "as President of the United States, as a helper in the battles and as a worker in the business of peace."

The Lord Mayor brought forth loud applause when he applied to President Wilson these words: "What he dared to dream of, that he dared to do."

When the Lord Mayor had completed his oration, the Town Clerk offered the President the morocco-bound volume in which he was to sign his name as a freeman of the city of Manchester. The President sat down at a small table and inscribed his name with a gold pen made especially for the occasion. In the meantime the assemblage, which was standing, began to sing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow." The Aldermen, city officials, and guests joined in the cheers which followed this civic ritual.

President Wilson and Mrs. Wilson then stood for flashlight photographs. Afterward the Lord Mayor announced that the President would speak. His announcement brought cheers from the assemblage, which resumed their seats as the President faced them.

President at Royal Exchange.

After the ceremonies at Free Trade Hall the President and Mrs. Wilson paid a brief visit to the Royal Exchange. The floor was filled with members when the President and his wife appeared in the visitors' gallery. The members, led by Sir Henry Haworth, the Chairman of the Exchange, sang, "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," after which there were lusty cries for a speech.

Sir Henry explained that it was not usual to make speeches in the Exchange, but he would like to have the President break the rule. The President spoke a few words, saying that he knew something of a cotton exchange, as he had been reared in the Southern States of the United States. Mrs. Wilson then stepped to the front of the balcony and was cheered loudly.

In his remarks to the members of the Exchange, the President said in part:

"I hope all of you make money out of it, [cotton,] but I have no doubt that in the transactions which occur in this building sometimes some may lose a little. I wish you Godspeed."

The luncheon by the municipality was given in the ballroom of the Midland Hotel. The room was decorated simply with palms standing against the white and gold walls. The tables were arranged in the form of a gridiron. The President sat in the centre of a long table on the right of the Lord Mayor. American and British flags were draped on the walls behind them.

The guests numbered 200. Prayer was offered by the Bishop of Manchester.

The arrangements for the luncheon were simple. The service was by waitresses dressed in plain black with white aprons. After coffee was served the Lord Mayor's announcer, standing with a wand behind the Mayor's chair, called for silence. The Mayor then offered a toast to the King and one to the President. The toasts having been drunk, the Lord Mayor announced: "Gentlemen, you may smoke."

In proposing "to the President of the United States" the Lord Mayor gave a short eulogistic speech and expressed appreciation of the compliment which the President had paid Manchester by bringing Mrs. Wilson with him. This caused a round of cheers.

At the conclusion of the President's speech the official party left the hotel to board the train for London, which started at 2:45 P. M.

KING GIVES FAREWELL DINNER TO WILSON

LONDON, Dec. 30, (Associated Press.)—President Wilson arrived in London at 7:15 P. M. and immediately went to Buckingham Palace. He was cheered by large numbers of persons who were proceeding homeward from business. Otherwise there was no demonstration, as the time of the arrival of the Presidential special train was not known to the public.

The farewell dinner given in the state dining room at Buckingham Palace tonight by King George and Queen Mary in honor of President Wilson and Mrs. Wilson was a private function. There was no procession into the dining room, which was decorated with yellow, and there were no speeches or toasts. The Grenadier Guards Band played during the dinner, but no national anthems were rendered.

Those who sat down to dinner were the King and Queen, President and Mrs. Wilson, Princess Mary, Prince Henry, Prince George, the Duke of Connaught, Ambassador John W. Davis, the Duke and Duchess of Abercorn, Lord and Lady Cavendish, Viscount and Viscountess Acheson, Viscount Astor, Admiral Sir Stanley Colville and Lady Colville, Sir Ronald Graham and Lady Graham, Miss Edith Benham, Rear Admiral Grayson, Brig. Gen. William H. Harts, the Duchess of Sutherland, the Dowager Countess of Airlie, Viscount Farquhar, Lord Steward to the King, and Lord Stamfordham, private secretary to the King.

King George escorted Mrs. Wilson to the dining room and President Wilson gave his arm to Queen Mary. The dinner was served on one long table. The King, with Mrs. Wilson on his right, sat in the centre on one side, while President Wilson, with the Queen beside him, sat opposite the King.

The dining room is a handsome apartment and contains many fine pictures and other art treasures. The table decorations were daffodils. Some of the smaller pieces of the Windsor gold plate were used for decorative purposes.

After the dinner members of the royal household who had not attended the function joined the party informally in the drawing room.

Unity of Spirit Is Wilson's Theme in Address at Manchester Luncheon

MANCHESTER, Dec. 30.—At the luncheon given in his honor this afternoon by the municipality President Wilson acknowledged the Lord Mayor's toast in these words:

"You have again made me feel the cordiality of your friendship, and I want to tell you how much I appreciate it, not only on my own behalf, but on behalf of my partner.

"It is very interesting that the Lord Mayor should have referred in his address to a very vital circumstance in our friendship. He referred to the fact that our men and your men have fought side by side in the great battles. But there was more than that in it. For the first time, upon such a scale at any rate, they have fought under a common commander. That is an advance which we have made upon the previous days, and what I have been particularly interested in has been the generosity of spirit with which that unity of command has been assented to. I not only had the pleasure of meeting Marshal Foch, who confirmed my admiration of him by the direct and simple manner with which he dealt with every subject we talked about, but I had the pleasure of meeting your own commander, and I understand how they co-operated, because I saw that they were real men.

"It takes a real man to subordinate himself, and it takes a real soldier to know that unity of command is the secret of success. That unity of command did swing the power of nations into a mighty force. I think we all must have felt how the momentum which got into all of the armies was concentrated into the single army, and we felt we had overcome all the obstacles.

Unity of Spirit in Peace.

"With our unity of command there arose a unity of spirit. The minute we consented to co-operate our hearts were drawn closer together into co-operation, and so from the military side we had given ourselves an example for the years to come. Not that in the years to come we must submit to a unity of command, but it does seem to me that in the years to come we must plan a unity of purpose, and in that unity of purpose we shall find a great recompense, a strengthening of our spirit in everything that we do.

"There is nothing so hampering and nothing so demeaning as jealousy. It is a cancer. It is a cancer in the heart—not only that, but in the counting room. It is a cancer throughout all the processes of civilization, and, having now seen we can fight shoulder to shoulder, we will continue to advance shoulder to shoulder, and I think you will find that the people of the United States are not the least eager for the purpose.

"I remember hearing the story of a warning that one of your Australian soldiers gave to one of ours. Our soldiers were considered by the older men to be a bit rash when they were in the field. I understand that one friendly Australian said that our men were rather rough. On one occasion an Australian said to one of our men: 'Man, a barrage is not a thing to lean up against.' They were a little bit inclined to lean up against the barrage, and yet I must confide to you that I was a bit proud of them for it. They had come over to get at the enemy, and they didn't know why they should delay.

"No Common Enemy Except Distrust."

"But, now that there is no common enemy except distrust and marring of plans, we can all feel the same eagerness in the new combat and feel that there is a common enterprise before us.

"We are not men because we have skill of hand, but we are men because we have elevation of spirit. It is in this spirit that we live and not in the tasks of the day. If it is not that, why is it that you hang the lad's musket or sword up above the mantelpiece, but never hang the yardstick up. There is nothing discreditable in the yardstick. It is altogether honorable, but he is using it for his own sake. But when he takes the musket or the sword he is giving everything and is getting nothing. It is honorable, not as an instrument, but as a symbol of self-sacrifice.

"A friend of mine said very truly: 'When peace is conducted in the spirit of war there will be no war.' When business is done with the point of view of the soldier who is serving his country, then business will be as histrionic as war. I believe that from generation to generation steps of that sort are gaining more and more, and men are beginning to see, not, perhaps, the Golden Age, but an age which is conducting them from victory to victory and may lead us to an elevation from which we can see the things for which the heart of mankind has longed."

PEACE ISSUES JOINED BY LEADERS' SPEECHES

London Press Comment with Interest on Clemenceau's and Wilson's Ideas.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—Wilson's speech at Manchester and Clemenceau's statement in the Chamber of Deputies indicate fairly clearly where idealistic and practical politics have come into conflict, and the lines along which a common denominator is being sought.

The President is a practical man as well as an idealist, and his Manchester statement is a complete, though somewhat reluctant, admission that abstract theory must occasionally compromise with concrete facts.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Dec. 31.—The Daily Chronicle, editorially discussing the passage in President Wilson's Manchester speech on the need of machinery for the readjustment of peace settlements, urges that the Peace Conference be considered as the first session of a body which will meet again from time to time in perpetuity.

"It should not give mandates for particular purposes to this or that Power," says the writer, "without clearly reserving to itself the right to review on future occasions the manner in which they have been exercised. It should not sanction settlements which are bound, whichever way they are drawn, to entail risks of friction without preserving itself and its machinery in being in order to cope with the friction if and when it arises. Thus the Conference automatically becomes a league by the necessary process of self-perpetuation. Unless it does so it cannot hope that its work will escape the fate of that done by former peace congresses—the fate of being ultimately unravelled by fresh wars."

LONDON, Tuesday, Dec. 31.—Citing passages from President Wilson's Manchester speech, which, it says, "illustrate his consciousness that the establishment of permanent peace is not a matter of rule and compasses, or a task which can be carried out to perfection finally by the joint wisdom of the conference," the Daly Telegraph instances parts of Premier Clemenceau's speech as indicating "some of those difficulties in the way of complete agreement, which are present in Mr. Wilson's mind, as also in the minds of French and British statesmen."

But the Telegraph is of the opinion that other parts of Clemenceau's speech show equally plainly an underlying community of convictions upon the larger matter.

The Daily Mail thinks that an understanding among the United States, France, and Great Britain has been reached through President Wilson's conversations. Citing M. Clemenceau's phrase, "Each will retain his own freedom," the Mail says:

"That is the kind of diplomacy we must carry into the Peace Conference. With it and common devotion to the right for which President Wilson appeals as an international rule of conduct there is no obstacle which will not melt away."

The Mail expresses gratitude for the coming of the President to Europe and says that his presence has created a strong moral force, besides a unison of friendship.

The Daily News, commenting on the speeches of President Wilson and Premier Clemenceau, remarks that they strike different notes, and says that this is only what was expected. It holds that reaching an agreement is bound to be long and difficult, otherwise President Wilson would not have broken precedents to come to Europe.

Referring to indications in the speeches of M. Pichon, French Foreign Minister, and the resignation of the Italian Minister, Bissolati, that the danger of national ambitions is looming larger than the abstract principles of justice, The Daily News says:

"There can be no accommodation between the old 'balance of power' order, which Clemenceau is reluctant to forsake, and the universal concert of mind and will, to which President Wilson summons the world. The conference must be supreme, or it will provoke war instead of ending it. It must meet, not to satisfy claims, but to establish justice. On one other terms can the world be saved from the unspeakable curse of permanent militarism."

PRESIDENT IS PLANNING TO SAIL ABOUT FEB. 10

Will Leave Paris for Rome Wednesday Night, Returning About Jan. 10.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—According to an Associated Press dispatch from Paris, President Wilson plans to spend New Year's Day in that city and to start for Italy New Year's night. He will return from Italy about Jan. 10, when the Interallied Conference will assemble.

The same dispatch says it is generally understood now that the President will remain in Europe for about a month after his return from Italy, and that he will take passage for America about Feb. 10.

President and Mrs. Wilson will leave Buckingham Palace tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock on the first stage of the journey back to France. In the procession to the Victoria Station semi-State landaus will be used. King George and President Wilson will occupy the first, Queen Mary, Mrs. Wilson, and Princess Mary the second, and members of the President's party and Court officials the third, fourth, and fifth. No troops will be stationed along the streets, but the party will have a guard of honor to the station. Sir Charles Cust, the King's Equerry, will accompany President Wilson to Calais.

Leaving Paris Wednesday night, he will arrive in the Italian capital Friday. Rome is the only city in Italy which he will visit.

While in Rome the President will be the guest of the Government. It seems certain that he will visit Pope Benedict and also call at the Methodist College.

By the time the President returns to Paris from Italy the British delegates to the Peace Conference will have arrived. The preliminary conferences may then be in sight, and the preliminary organization work of the American Peace Mission will have been completed.

WILSON'S WARMTH WINS MANCHESTER

CONVENTIONS PUT ASIDE

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MANCHESTER, Dec. 30.—The feature which stands out most clearly in this busy day in President Wilson's life is the sentiment dominating the address which he delivered in Free Trade Hall, the historic building where John Bright enunciated his economic theories and the British woman suffrage movement was born.

He intimated that America and the Allies were working along the same lines for the common good of the world, and indirectly confirmed the general understanding that he and the leaders of the British Government were in agreement of the principles of the peace settlement.

One statement that pleased the Free Trade Hall audience greatly directly concerned Great Britain and the United States. Speaking of the relations of these two nations, he referred to "the pulse of sympathy that is now beating between us."

Altogether, the address seemed to strike a responsive chord in the hearts of this progressive community, which is probably in closer touch with America than any other city in the British Isles by reason of its cotton manufacturing industry.

The occasion of the President's address was the presentation of the freedom of the city. With the Lord Mayor he had driven through the crowded streets early in the morning to the docks of the Manchester Ship Canal and had received a hearty demonstration all the way. After a brief trip by steamer over a portion of this artifical waterway, the banks of which and the ships in port were crowded with cheering people, he had gone to Free Trade Hall to receive the freedom of the city.

The audience in the hall was inclined to be more than cordial. It spontaneously broke conventions by singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," when the President appeared with Mrs. Wilson, and then three cheers. When the town clerk read the resolution, presenting the freedom of the city and the Lord Mayor delivered an address of welcome the President spoke words which seemed to please his auditors immensely.

Any hope on the part of the most enthusiastic supporters of an Anglo-American union that a definite agreement, approaching an alliance, would result from the present situation was shown to be vain by the President's declaration that the United States "will join no combination of power which is not a combination of all of us." At the same time the President made it clear that the best relations existed between Great Britain and America and indicated a desire for their continuance.

So far as the establishment of more cordial relations between the two nations is concerned, President Wilson's visit to England seems to have been marked by success. His attitude has removed the fear from the minds of everybody that he had come with a set plan for a peace settlement upon which he would insist. If a similar fear as to Lloyd George existed in the President's mind, it has been removed by what has taken place in their conferences of the last few days.

The President indicated his own mental disposition when he said in his Free Trade Hall speech that no man or body of men could make a satisfactory settlement in the Peace Conference. This remark emphasizes what has been said in well-informed quarters in Paris. Since the President came to Europe he has shown a desire to ascertain the views of the allied representatives before determining his own course on the important questions involved.

UNIONIST PRESSURE ON LLOYD GEORGE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—The process of reconstructing the Cabinet is in full swing in British political circles. Reports are current that the Unionists will use their Parliamentary preponderance to obtain much stronger representation in the Cabinet, and that they are already demanding several important offices heretofore held by Coalition Liberals. Two representative politicians, both elected to the new Parliament, debated the point in the presence of THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent.

One, a Coalition Unionist, said in effect: "Lloyd George has got to remember that the coalition majority is mainly Unionist."

The other, a Coalition Liberal, responded:

"But the Unionists have also got to remember that it was thanks to Lloyd George being the head of the coalition that they were elected."

As to what would be the upshot, both M. P.'s seemed agreed that, should acute differences come about between Lloyd George, representing the Coalition Liberals, and Bonar Law, representing Coalition Unionists, Lloyd George would unhesitatingly make a fresh appeal to the country.

Independent Liberals are finding some solace for their defeat in the fact that the total Coalition vote numbered 5,091,000, while the total non-Coalition vote amounted to 4,580,486, and that while less than a million and a half votes returned 136 Coalition Liberals, only 26 Independent Liberals were elected by an aggregate vote of over a million and a quarter, and that finally the Labor vote, totaling nearly one and a half million, returned only 59 representatives.

Lloyd George, according to current political gossip, is personally much disturbed by the fact that the Independent Liberals to whom he could have looked for support on broad lines of policy, have such a small representation in the new Parliament, and that the Labor representation is weaker than had been expected.

Where and when the clash between the Liberals and Unionists will come is a matter of keen speculation. The general trend of opinion is that every effort will be made on both sides to stave off the split till after peace has been made, but there is no little fear that the Irish question will call for decisions which it will be found impossible to postpone.

LONDON, Dec. 30, (British Wireless Service.)—According to present arrangements the members of the new House of Commons elected this month will take their seats in Parliament on Jan. 21. The swearing in of the members probably will continue for ten days or a fortnight. The actual business of the session is not likely to be reached until the early part of February.

It is expected in political circles that the provisional list of new appointments to the Cabinet will be available before the end of this week. One of the most important vacancies is that of the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, Andrew Bonar Law having expressed his intention to relinquish this office and confine himself to the Government leadership in the House. All the Coalition Ministers have been re-elected to the House and are available for reappointment to the Cabinet.

The defeat of Arthur Henderson made vacant the Chairmanship of the Labor Party in the House. J. H. Thomas, Secretary of the General Railwaymen's Union, has been elected to the vacancy, and his selection meets with general approval. There is discussion of the possibility of the Labor members actively supporting the Government in the general policy of reform it has outlined.

Reuter's, Limited, says it understands that the Asquith men elected to Parliament, and also a number of Coalition Liberal members, will be invited to meet the defeated leaders of the Asquith group before Parliament convenes. It is recalled that former Premier Asquith declared before the election that the support of the Government was not inconsistent with Liberal principles. It is persistently rumored today that the Asquithians may reunite under Premier Lloyd George.

Supreme Court Justice Daniel F. Cohalan yesterday sent a cablegram to Eoin MacNeill, Dublin, and Eamon De Valera, Lincoln Prison, England, congratulating them on "Ireland's overwhelming verdict in favor of President Wilson's policy of self-determination for all peoples."

FRANCE TO NAME DELEGATES.

Peace Discussions Stimulated by Leaders' Statements.

PARIS, Dec. 30.—This has been the most active day's discussion in peace circles since the American delegation arrived, as the declaration of Premier Clemenceau and Foreign Minister Pichon in the Chamber of Deputies last night gave a rallying point in the form of official announcements of the plans of the French Government.

M. Clemenceau's overwhelming majority on the vote of confidence in the Chamber of Deputies makes him a commanding figure in France similar to that of Lloyd George as a result of the British elections. It is expected that the names of the French peace delegates will soon be announced as a result of the strong support given to the Cabinet.

Names Wang as Peace Delegate.

PEKING, Dec. 30, (By The Associated Press.)—The Chinese Government has appointed C. T. Wang, President of the Senate, as a delegate to the Inter-Allied Peace Conference. Mr. Wang is now in America.

war would not have occurred. This system of alliances, which I do not renounce, will be my guiding thought at the Peace Conference if your confidence sends me there.

Let President Talk in His Own Way.

"I have been reproached with deceiving President Wilson. I do not understand why. I have made it a rule not to question him, but to let him develop his views. That is what he did. President Wilson, to whom certain persons, in the interest of their parties, attribute intentions which, perhaps, are not his, has opened his mind and has inspired respect through his simple speech and the nobility of it. President Wilson said to me: 'I will try to convince you, but perhaps you will convince me.'

"You know that reservations have been made on the question of freedom of the seas. Premier Lloyd George said to me one day: 'You will admit that without the British fleet you could not have continued the war.' I answered in the affirmative. The British Premier then asked me if I was disposed to do anything in opposition to British ideas on the freedom of the seas. I answered in the negative. Concerning this question, President Wilson said to me:

"'I approve of what you said. What I have to offer the allied Governments will change in no way your answer to Premier Lloyd George.'"

The Premier's speech was made about midnight. Although he is 78 years of age and attended three sessions of the Chamber yesterday, morning, afternoon, and night, he took his seat in the Senate this morning promptly at 9 o'clock, after sleeping a few hours on a lounge, to assist Louis Klotz, the Minister of Finance, to push the budget through before the end of the year. He took up the work in the Senate at once, the Chamber at 9 o'clock this morning having passed the budget by an overwhelming majority after twenty-four hours of virtually continuous sitting.

After the Senate debate was concluded the Premier went to the Ministry of War, where he worked throughout the remainder of the morning, and in the afternoon received several callers, notable among them being Marshal Foch. M. Clemenceau intends to leave Paris tomorrow evening for a week's rest.

The morning newspapers generally approve the Premier's speech with the exception of the Unified Socialists and some Radical organs. The Figaro says that the Premier told the Chamber and the country what they should be told and "his words should be read and meditated upon the whole land."

La Liberté assails the opposition, charging that it was endeavoring to arouse between Premier Clemenceau and President Wilson an artificial conflict, although it asserts cordiality, mutual esteem and agreement of general views exist between the Prime Minister and the President.

Deputy Paul Mounier, Director of La Verité, the Socialist organ and mouthpiece of former Premier Caillaux, in an editorial with regard to the views of President Wilson and Premier Clemenceau, says:

"The two men have nothing in common. On the one side is the old policy of military alliances, ruinous armaments, eternal war and secret diplomacy; on the other side Democracy, mistress of herself, is imposing a universal alliance of the peoples on out of date governments. There is now an abyss between France and America."

SEEK AMERICA'S AID FOR NEW GERMANY

Coblenz People Have Hopes of Assistance in Establishing Stable Republic.

EXPECT HEAVY PENALTIES

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, Dec. 30.—In these days, when from Berlin and other cities come so many reports of disorders, the people of this part of Germany are turning their hopes more and more toward America for assistance, for help in the forming of a real republic.

Recent conversations with many leading citizens convince me that they have made up their minds that Germany has got to pay heavily for the damage done by German arms, has got to atone for the crimes of German militarism; but, knowing that the Allies wish to establish a stable government in Germany, day by day they are placing more and more dependence on the help that they expect President Wilson will give.

An editorial yesterday in the Coblenz Zeitung, which described a great electric-lighted cross raised over the headquarters of the Third Army, used many words in telling how the cross represented the spirit of America.

The prospects at present seem to be that the same conservative elements will control the National Assembly, but there are dangers. Liebknecht's crowd has designs upon it, and will prevent its assemblage if it can, and, failing in that, will try to get strength enough to interrupt the plans of the real rebuilders in Germany.

Germans in this conservative part of Germany want to get the nation back in working order as soon as possible, to arrange for paying what they owe the Allies and to clean up the war business as quickly as they can. They want a confederation of German States under a flag and a Government in which all classes shall be represented. They have no patience with Workmen's Councils, and still less with Bolsheviki.

I have heard it said a hundred times here in Coblenz, "We want a Government of States just as there is in America."

Now, no one who knows anything about it believes that Germany is actuated by anything but selfish motives. The Germans are in a bad hole and realize it. They see in Wilson one man who can pull them out and they are crying out for him. But at the same time they think Wilson thinks it not worth while to rescue them.

Under a rule holding over from the fighting days to the effect that no dispatches may contain anything which might injure the morale of the United States or the allied nations, correspondents with the American Army of Occupation are not allowed to discuss certain features of the international political situation along the Rhine.

For instance, Paris newspapers publish statements about a certain faction in France desiring to extend the French boundary to the Rhine, but correspondents with the American Army on the Rhine may not discuss this matter.

EISNER'S HOLD WEAK; IS URGED TO RESIGN

Spartacides Bitter Against Him—Centrists Want Rupprecht to Rule.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Dec. 30.—If Liebknecht triumphs in Berlin a Bolshevist outbreak, it is predicted here, will surely follow in Bavaria.

Premier Eisner's position is more shaken than is generally supposed. The newly formed Spartacus organization in Munich is very active and is possessed of arms, including machine guns, with plenty of ammunition purchased with money supplied by Russian Bolsheviki. The Spartacus leaders are very bitter against Eisner because he has ventured to criticise the doctrines of Bolshevism in his speeches, and they declare openly that they are preparing a coup d'état.

The Catholic Centre Party and Herr Heim, a powerful and ambitious Bavarian peasant leader, are likewise undermining Eisner's position. Heim aspires to be elected the first President of the Bavarian Republic. There is also a large section of the Centre Party which is strongly monarchical, intriguing to place Crown Prince Rupprecht on the throne.

Since his return from Holland to Bavaria Rupprecht has intrenched himself in one of the mad King Ludwig's famed mountain castles, surrounded by a bodyguard of several hundred loyal officers. It is considered certain that he is conspiring against the present Government.

Even Eisner's friends now admit that he will probably have no majority in the National Assembly. Pressure is being brought to bear upon him to resign and surrender the Premiership to Herr Auer, the Majority Socialist leader. It is said that Eisner has already expressed his willingness to accept a portfolio in Auer's Cabinet in this event.

MORE UNEMPLOYMENT IN OCCUPIED REGION

COBLENZ, Dec. 29, (Associated Press.)—The steadily increasing number of unemployed men in Coblenz and other towns in the occupied area is causing American officers considerable anxiety. Many of the idle men are discharged German soldiers. An official count made yesterday by the Burgomaster shows 500 laborers idle, and 350 skilled workmen also without employment.

Those who cannot obtain work are entitled to a daily bounty of 3 marks 50 pfennig from the city. To unemployed laborers work has been offered by the city at 4 marks a day, but only a few have accepted, as the ordinary wage is 6 marks a day. Efforts are being made to restore discharged soldiers to their pre-war occupations, replacing, if necessary, women now holding the positions.

Reports from the country indicate there is plenty of work there, but officials have found difficulty in inducing laborers to leave the cities, particularly in a time of social unrest like the present.

The postal censorship as imposed by the American decree for the conduct of Germans within the area of occupation became effective today. The censorship does not apply to mail for circulation within the occupied area, but all letters and packages for points outside and all incoming mail are censored.

The censorship force consists of two officers and forty-five enlisted men, with offices at Treves and Coblenz, an officer being in charge of each headquarters. The soldiers are all picked men. Soldiers with a knowledge of German are in demand in the censorship and other departments of the Third Army, but so far there has been no real shortage, as men are being brought from divisions not included in the Army of Occupation.

Daily telephone conversations between Berlin and the headquarters of the Third American Army in Coblenz have taken place recently. The long distance telephone conversations have been in connection with the work of the Inter-Allied Armistice Commission, and also in arranging details concerning the war material which the Germans are assembling in the region of Coblenz.

All wires between Berlin and the American area of occupation except two were severed Saturday in accordance with the terms of the American occupation decree. The two remaining wires are controlled by the American censors in Coblenz.

SEES CLEMENCEAU'S POWER AS LASTING

French Cabinet Bolstered by Result of British Elections, Paris Journalist Holds.

SOCIALIST ATTACKS FUTILE

By WALTER DURANTY.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Dec. 30.—"There is an old saying in French politics—'It is often the Government which is assailed most that lasts longest.' Unless I am vastly mistaken, the Clemenceau Cabinet still has a good lease of life ahead of it," said a veteran Parliamentary journalist today, on being asked to give his opinion regarding the numerous attacks on the Government for which the budget debate has furnished an occasion. He said that the fact that Clemenceau had finally replied to his critics in person, after long waiting, was not a sign of weakness.

"It is quite the contrary, indeed," he went on, "and fully in accordance with the 'Tiger's' habitual method, which consists in letting his opponents talk themselves well-nigh to a standstill and then demolishing them by a brusque, savage onslaught.

"Moreover, the British elections have indirectly proved the real strength of the Clemenceau position. Lloyd George's overwhelming majority and the crushing defeat of the Asquith party indicate, first, that there is a universal sentiment that the leaders who have brought the war to a victorious conclusion are most fitted to handle the delicate problems of peace, and, second, that the parties who, like our French Socialists, have been identified with the idea of a compromise peace, and subsequently with the idea of letting Germany down gently, have entirely misjudged public opinion and largely alienated the supporters they formerly possessed.

"In vain has the Opposition here hammered at what it believed to be the Government's weakest points—the demobilization and transportation questions. Despite the somewhat labored character of Transport Minister Claveille's explanations, they proved for the time being at least adequate and unanswerable.

"As for the thorny subject, raised by Albert Thomas, of labor already mobilized in Government factories versus demobilized workers for repairing and preparing the rolling stock so urgently needed, it actually afforded Loucheur a valuable opportunity of reminding the Chamber that it was its own decision a fortnight ago that no further 'sursis'—that is, temporary demobilization—should be accorded which was chiefly responsible for the delay in reorganizing the industrial life of the country. Loucheur drove the point home by an expression of hope that the Chamber would change its mind about the sursis as soon as possible and refuse to be led astray by the theory of the universal actuality of demobilization, which, however attractive in theory from a democratic standpoint, utterly failed to take into account the importance of 'pivotments,' as the British call them, in reorganizing business and industry.

"Thus the net result of Thomas's intervention—which the Socialists had hoped would be a strong card in their favor, as showing that he and the forty other win-the-war Socialists who had declined to agree to the compromise policy of the rest of their party were nevertheless ready to join an attack upon the Government—was to emphasize the fallacy underlying that equality of demobilization which is one of the principal planks of the whole Socialist platform.

"Hardly more successful was the Socialist project introduced by Jacques Stern, which closed Saturday's debate, to the effect that all allied war expenses should be pooled and divided among the various peoples in proportion to their populations. Attractive as the proposal might seem at first sight to France—who would only be called upon to pay 2,500,000,000 francs of annual interest on the total sum of 28,000,000,000, whereof America's share would be 6,000,000,000, Russia's 8,000,000,000, and Japan's 3,000,000,000—the Chamber received Stern's hour-and-a-half exposition of his plan in an exceedingly lukewarm fashion.

"The fact is, there exists in France a considerable body of opinion which is opposed to any international experiments. This doesn't augur any too well for the success of the League of Nations proposals. Yet it cannot be denied that not only are the French people exceedingly individualistic in character, but that, furthermore, four and a half years of trial in the war furnace have brought them to distrust high-sounding theories and phrases unless backed by the logic of experience. I feel sure that when the time comes to put the League of Nations into concrete form it will encounter serious criticism from the mass of my countrymen unless the Russian problem—to say nothing of the German—has been satisfactorily settled beforehand.

"That is a matter for the future. What counts at the moment is that Clemenceau appears to have gained rather than lost ground as a result of the last few days' proceedings in the Chamber."

AMERICAN DANCERS HOOTED IN BERLIN

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Dec. 29, (via Copenhagen, Dec. 30.)—For weeks the so-called Film Association, comprising all sorts of people connected with moving pictures in its membership, has been advertising a public ball at the Zoological Gardens, at which some foreign dancers, among them some French and Americans, were to make an appearance. Though the newspapers warned the film people that the public would not approve such performances at present, the program was not changed.

Before the opening ball some soldiers appeared and made the Director of the Zoological Gardens promise that the foreign dancers should not appear. The managers of the ball, however, ignored this promise and permitted Mlle. Malvine and M. Fernando of Paris to do one of their extraordinary dances. They had hardly begun, however, when a deafening noise from all sides of the house made them stop. The two were hooted and jeered till they stopped dancing, when Mlle. Malvine revenged herself by shouting "Vive la France!"

There was more and still noisier trouble till the French pair were hurried off by the managers.

Hadyes and Biller of New York, who followed the French dancers later, were received not much better by the enraged public, which induced the Americans to retire without showing what they could do.

AMERICAN TRANSPORT STRANDS OFF FRANCE

Believed That Tenadores, Bound for Brest, Will Be Floated From Rocks.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—The American transport Tenadores, which left New York for Brest on Dec. 18, was stranded on the rocks near the Ile d'Yeu, (Isle Dieu,) in the Bay of Biscay, Saturday. Advices say those on board are being rescued.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—Navy tugs have been sent to the assistance of the Tenadores. Reports received here today said the vessel probably would be floated. These advices say the transport grounded north of the Ile d'Yeu.

The Ile d'Yeu is ten miles from the French coast and about twenty-eight miles northwest of Les Sables d'Olenne. The island, a mass of granite, has one town, Yeu, with a population of about 3,000.

The Tenadores is a passenger vessel of 7,783 tons gross register, owned by the United Fruit Company, and prior to being requisitioned by the War Department as a transport was in service between New York and Central American and Cuban ports. She last arrived here Dec. 11 with a large number of wounded officers and men.

The ship was in charge of Commander J. D. Gilman, U. S. N., and carried a crew of 305 men, all from the Navy Department. In addition to officers and crew, the Tenadores had on board six officers and sixty-one men of the Italian Army.

Cable advices received by navy authorities here from officers of the Tenadores were that the ship might be salvaged.

ARMY WILL STOP BERLIN DISORDER

Late last night the Independents thought they had got the best of their three colleagues by putting eight insidious questions to the Central Council, upon an answer to which they made their further action dependent. The questions, which were formulated by Dittmann, were to this effect:

"First—Does the Central Council approve the action of Ebert, Scheidemann, and Landsberg, who, on the night of Dec. 23-24, gave unlimited power to the War Minister to use military force against the sailors in the Castle and royal stables?

"Second—Does the Central Council approve the ultimatum of ten minutes fixed for the surrender of the Castle stables by General Lequis?

"Third—Will the Council see to the immediate execution of the resolution passed by the Congress of Soldiers' and Workmen's Councils, abolishing all distinctions of military rank and prohibiting officers in home garrisons from wearing arms?

"Fourth—Does the Council approve the intimation at Hindenburg's headquarters in a confidential message to the Eastern Headquarters that this resolution would not be recognized?

"Fifth—Does the Council approve the removal of the Government from Berlin to Weimar or any other place in Central Germany?

"Sixth. Does the Council approve the program that instead of total demobilization only a reduction of the standing army is planned?

"Seventh. Is the Council of the same view with us that the Socialist Republic must not rest on the support of Generals and the rest of the standing army, but on Citizens' Guards to be formed on democratic principles?

"Eighth. Does the Council approve that the socializing of industries as far as practicable should begin at once?"

Council Answered Only Three.

The Central Council answered the first question positively in the affirmative, and the second and fourth in the negative, while as to the answers to Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8 it decided that further reports were required.

Despite the fact that this result was considered rather favorable to the Independents, they resigned, simply because the Central Council, having thus been cross-examined, thought it only fair that the People's Commissioners should also answer two questions, namely:

"First. Are the People's Commissioners prepared to protect public order and security and especially private and public property against violent aggression?

"Second. Are the People's Commissioners in a position to defend with what forces they command the public offices against any violence, no matter from what side, so as to secure their own administration and the effective service of subordinate organs?"

Haase, Dittmann, and Barth thereupon declared that they would resign voluntarily, because they could not answer their own question No. 1 affirmatively, as the Council had done, because they believed that bloodshed might have been avoided if Ebert, Scheidemann and Landsberg had taken different measures, and because they must also disapprove entrusting a representative of the old régime such as General Lequis with power over life or death. Nor was the way the Council disposed of the rest of the questions satisfactory to the three Independent Commissioners.

As, however, they declared their intention of resigning, they said they saw the necessity of answering the Central Council's two questions.

Solution of Crisis a Surprise.

Though well-informed circles were convinced that the crisis would end with the elimination of the Independent element from the Government, the way it finally came about was a great surprise to everybody.

The Independents' organ, Die Freiheit, commenting on the result, says:

"So we leave the Government because the policy of vacillation and weakness of the Majority Socialists makes it impossible for us to remain. Our friends are to realize their social principles in the most adverse circumstances. In spite of all impediments, they achieved important points and often prevented dangerous measures.

"Now a new period begins for us. Now we employ all our energies unimpeded for the Socialist cause. From the Central Council decision we appeal to the people, trusting in their revolutionary instinct and their socialistic conscience, and we are convinced that now more than ever we are the chosen apostles of the revolution and its moving spirit."

Such phrases are an apparent echo of Liebknecht's rhetoric, and, indeed, most people fear that the Independents, who are now lost between the Majority Socialists and the Sparticides, will again seek closer relations with the latter.

NOSKE, LOEBE, WISSEL APPOINTED TO CABINET

Scheidemann Secretary of Foreign Affairs—Sunday Meetings in Berlin Orderly.

LONDON, Dec. 30, (Associated Press.)—A Berlin dispatch received in Copenhagen says that the Central Council of Soldiers and Workmen of Germany has appointed Herr Noske Governor of Kiel; Herr Loebe, editor of the Breslau Volkswacht, and Herr Wissel, a member of the Reichstag, as Cabinet members to replace Foreign Minister Haase, Minister of Social Policy Barth, and Demobilization Minister Dittmann, who retired Saturday night.

The new Cabinet held its first sitting on Sunday afternoon. It was agreed that Philipp Scheidemann would take over the Secretaryship of Foreign Affairs in succession to Haase. Herr Noske will become head of the Military Department, and Herr Wissel will become Minister of Social Policy.

Ebert, Scheidemann, and Landsberg have published a statement in the Berlin Vorwärts, in which they declare themselves to have been responsible for the recent summoning of troops against the bluejackets in Berlin. They say that had they been informed by the leader of the naval division that he could no longer be responsible for the security of the life of Commander Wels, Military Commandant of Berlin, who had been arrested by the sailors. Thereupon the commissioners gave instructions to certain military commanders to take the necessary steps to liberate Wels.

The Freiheit, organ of the Independent Socialists, in an editorial says that this statement is a confession of fault, and it denies that the life of Wels was in danger.

The Independent Socialists in the Prussian Ministry and officials of the Prussian Government who belong to that party have resigned, according to a Berlin dispatch to the Amsterdam Handelsblad.

Leading Independent Socialists have indicated that their party representatives would retire from all positions they now occupy in State and Government departments.

Reviewing the situation leading to his resignation, Dittmann said that a crisis had been impending since Nov. 9, owing to constant differences as to internal and foreign policies between the two sections of the Cabinet, the Socialists and the Independent Socialists. He said that the matters which caused the principal trouble were pressing economic problems and questions of demobilization and military reorganization.

Barth was present when Dittmann was talking and took a most gloomy view of the immediate economic future of Germany. Both the food situation and the problem of raw products, he said, presented great difficulties. He expressed himself as being in favor of sending a peace commission to President Wilson immediately, with the request that Mr. Wilson dictate peace to Germany based on democratic principles.

No disturbances had occurred in Berlin up to late Sunday afternoon. Rain began to fall at that time and the crowds in the street dissolved. Huge processions and demonstrations were held Sunday by all parties.

The Independent Socialists, members of the Spartacus faction, and sailors held a big demonstration in connection with the burial of the victims of Tuesday's fighting.

It is reported from Berlin that several hundred thousand persons participated in a demonstration under the auspices of the Majority Socialists. Leaders of the Majority Socialists made speeches in the streets and in the Tiergarten.

MOBS LOOTNG FRANKFORT.

Troops Refuse to Fire on Them—Miners Resist Soldiers.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—Pillaging on a large scale is being carried on by mobs in Frankfort, and the authorities are powerless to prevent it, according to a Central News dispatch from Amsterdam. Troops in the city refused to fire on the rioters.

Striking miners in the Düsseldorf district have fought a pitched battle with the soldiers protecting the mine. The encounter resulted in several persons being killed and wounded before the troops finally surrounded and arrested the miners.

3,707 TROOPS HERE ON MAURETANIA

SENATOR HOLLIS RETURNS

Gen. Morrow, Praising Americans, Says We Owe Big Debt to France and England.

The Cunarder Mauretania, under charter to the United States Navy as a transport, arrived yesterday at noon from Brest with 3,707 officers and enlisted men on board, having made the trip in less than six days, at an average speed of twenty-two knots. Captain Arthur H. Rostron, the commander, said that the voyage had been very smooth. On board were 237 sick and wounded.

The entire regiment of the 347th Infantry, with the exception of Company H, was on the Mauretania. The 87th Division, of which the 347th Regiment is a unit, is composed of Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Southern Alabama troops. When the armistice was signed the regiment was at Pons, north of Bordeaux, and was ordered home.

The transport was met at Quarantine by the police boat Patrol, with members of the Welcome Committee. On account of the strong ebb tide the Mauretania was held at the head of her pier at Thirteenth Street for more than half an hour before she could be moved into her berth. On Christmas Day a turkey dinner was served to the nearly 5,000 souls aboard, including officers, men, and the crew. Afterward there was a concert in the big troop mess hall, with carol singing by the ship's glee singers.

Brig. Gen. J. J. Morrow, Chief of the Engineers of the First Army Corps, which fought at Château-Thierry, Vesle River, Verdun, and Argonne, who was the senior army officer on board, said: "It was a great war, but it is a greater victory. The American Army did its share, but we can never forget what we owe to the British and the French. The American soldier has no better on earth as a fighter."

Senator Hollis Returns.

United States Senator Henry F. Hollis of New Hampshire returned after being in the various war zones since last July. He said that he had been under fire in Flanders, Château-Thierry, Verdun, and at St. Mihiel, and last in the Argonne Forest in October, where 100 men were killed in the position near him. The Senator said he had also been in Spain, and met King Alfonso.

"I waited in Paris," Senator Hollis continued, "to see President Wilson arrive, and was glad that I did, as it was something to be remembered. I had a talk with him before leaving France and he told me that his reception by the French people had pleased him. The great evil in Europe now is Bolshevism, and the only way to stop its spread is to innoculate those countries with the toxine of progressiveness."

Another passenger was J. R. Gordon, who went to England for the United States Shipping Board to discuss merchant shipping operations between the United States and Great Britain. Paul D. Cravath, legal adviser to the Treasury Department and American representative on the Interallied Council on War Purchases and Finances, which has been in session for many months in Paris, came back on the Mauretania.

One of the officers lying in the hospital on the transport was Captain Morse Osborn, a surgeon attached to the 146th Field Hospital of the 37th Division, whose home is at Columbus, Ohio. While training in England early last Summer a horse fell upon him and broke several of his ribs. A few days before the armistice was signed Captain Osborn was at the Argonne Forest when a big shell exploded near him, hurling him into a shell hole with such violence that the old wound was reopened.

New Yorkers Among Wounded.

The majority of the hospital cases on board were men from New York belonging to the 27th Division. Corporal Weir A. Kellogg of Canandaigua, N. Y., of L Company, 108th Infantry, the old 3d Regiment, told of his experiences on Sept. 29, when he was shot through the leg in No Man's Land in an attack on the Hindenburg line.

"After I fell," the Corporal said, "it was twenty-six hours before I was picked up and taken to a field hospital. All that time I lay on the top of a ridge looking down into the Hindenburg trench system, with shells screeching over my head. The fire was so terrific that no one could get through to rescue me until the morning of Sept. 30, when the line had been broken and there was a lull in the artillery fire of the enemy."

Private Joseph F. Berardy of 1,057 De Kalb Avenue, Brooklyn, of Company E, 106th Infantry, said that he lay in a shell hole for three and a half days with five explosive bullets in his left leg without being able to move. He was finally found by a detachment of Australian soldiers.

Another passenger was rear Admiral Charles P. Plunkett, who took the big naval 14-inch guns to France that were used on the western front. He took 500 men to man the guns. One was killed and five were wounded. At times their range was twenty-six miles. On the last day of fighting they fired 800 shells.

S. Brinkerhoff Thorne, Walter E. Hope, and James H. Allport, sent to investigate matters in connection with the coal industry in Europe, said there was a great shortage of coal in France. The situation in Italy was also very serious, they said, and in England the authorities were releasing 5,000 coal miners from the army every day to work in the mines.

EX-KAISER IS NERVOUS.

Bentinck, It Is Said, Would Welcome Relief from His Dilemma.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 30.—It is an open secret that Count von Bentinck, at whose castle in Amerongen former Emperor William is stopping, would not be displeased with the departure of his guest, according to the Wageningen correspondent of the Nieus Van Den Dag.

In the house of his host the ex-Emperor has all the honors shown him which he formerly claimed. This, the correspondent reports, is especially evident at meals, which are taken with the Count's family, and to which the aristocrats of the neighborhood are sometimes invited. The former ruler is always regarded and treated as the chief figure on these occasions.

The former Emperor is suffering from nervousness, which does not make intercourse with him easy. If he could get a house of his own, the correspondent thinks, many persons would consider it a happy solution.

The correspondent adds that it is believed in the neinghborhood that the Castle de Monte may eventually be rented to Herr Hohenzollern.

WILL BAR ENEMY POWERS.

Peace Commissioners Won't Admit Them to Early Negotiations.

PARIS, Dec. 30.—The Central Powers will not be admitted to the Peace Congress early in the negotiations, according to an outline given the Midi by a French diplomat who is engaged in framing the program of the preliminaries to the congress.

"The early entry of the enemy powers," he says, "into the negotiations need not be expected, as there will be four preceding stages. The first stage will be a meeting between France, Great Britain, Italy, and the United States for the formation of a united diplomatic command. The second stage will be a plenary meeting of all the Allies, at which the smaller States will adhere to the results of the first stage.

your personal feelings with respect to an individual to influence you, rather than your duty to the soldier boys. I suppose if you and Mr. Hearst had been of draft age, and had been called by the Government, you would have refused to serve. Very truly yours,
JOHN F. HYLAN, Mayor.

Mr. Hughes wrote this reply to Mayor Hylan:

New York, Dec. 30, 1918.
Hon. John F. Hylan, Mayor, City Hall.

Dear Sir: Your letter of Dec. 28 in answer to mine of Dec. 20 has been received.

I need not discuss with you my willingness to render any helpful service within my power. Your action raises a wholly different issue.

The use of the city's welcome to our returning troops as a vehicle for a public testimonial to Mr. Hearst is resented by soldiers and civilians alike. I shall be able to show my appreciation of the splendid work of our troops without giving approval to Mr. Hearst's activity. Very truly yours,
CHARLES E. HUGHES.

The letter from Dr. Henry van Dyke was written in Princeton, where Dr. van Dyke is a member of the faculty of the university, by his Secretary, Miss Agnes Rix, and was directed to Grover Whalen, Mayor Hylan's Secretary. The letter said:

Dr. Henry van Dyke has received your letter of Dec. 7, and wishes to express to the Mayor his appreciation of the appointment on the committee to welcome home our soldiers, sailors, and marines. Nothing could give Dr. van Dyke more gratification than to take part in such a welcome.

But if, as the newspapers report, Mr. William Randolph Hearst is to be the Chairman, or a member of this committee, Dr. van Dyke must respectfully decline to belong to it. He regards the action and correspondence of Mr. Hearst recently revealed through the Department of Justice as distinctly disqualifying him for service on such a committee, which should be composed only of citizens whose patriotism is beyond suspicion and whose character is above reproach.

In his letter regretting that the membership of Mr. Hearst had made it necessary for him to refuse to serve on the committee, William Allen Butler, the President of the Lawyers' Club, said that it would be a great pleasure for him to serve under Colonel Rodman Wanamaker, who is Chairman of the General Committee, and that he would be gratified to take part in any reception to the soldiers.

"But I understand that William R. Hearst is included as a member of this committee," added Mr. Butler. "According to his public statements, the principles he stands for are, in my opinion utterly at variance with the ideals that sent our boys overseas to the aid of the Allies; and as one who appeared to be opposed to their departure, there can be, I believe, no propriety in his taking part officially in the welcome to their homecoming. It appearing that Mr. Hearst is Chairman of the most important sub-committee I must, therefore, regretfully decline the invitation to become a member."

New Committee of Citizens Suggested.

In the meeting lasting more than two hours at the Hotel Belmont, Dr. Manning, Dr. Silverman, and others who had resigned from the committee because of the membership of Mr. Hearst asserted their belief that if the Mayor persisted in refusing to accede to the request for the removal of Mr. Hearst a representative committee of citizens could be formed to welcome the soldiers. It was said that this course had been followed in Chicago. As a step in protesting to the Mayor against retaining Mr. Hearst as a member of the committee seven representatives of patriotic societies were appointed to arrange for a mass meeting to be held on some Sunday evening before Jan. 15.

A resolution also was adopted unanimously at the meeting calling not only for the resignation of Mr. Hearst as a member of the committee to welcome the soldiers but protesting also against his appointment to any other committee for erecting a memorial to the soldiers either in this country or in France. The resolution read:

> This meeting protests against the appointment of William Randolph Hearst by the Mayor of the City of New York as a member of the committee in connection with the welcoming of the returning American soldiers and sailors and in connection with the erection of a memorial to our dead soldiers, his course both before and during the war having been such as to make such an appointment an insult and an affront to our soldiers, sailors, and other citizens. It demands his resignation from such committees.

"The situation is as bad as it can be, and surely we cannot make it any worse," said Dr. Manning in discussing the plans for a citizens' committee, after it had been remarked that the official city committee had done nothing to welcome the soldiers, although it had been in existence for a month and a half and soldiers had been landing in this country for several weeks. "It is impossible for me to find language too strong to characterize the situation, and to express what is due to our returning soldiers, our own self-respect, and the honor of our city. I stand ready to do anything to get us out of this hole.

"The appointment of Hearst to this committee to welcome our soldiers was almost unbelievable. It is impossible to see how the Mayor could have made the appointment, and a citizen has only to look at the files of The American to understand why. It is an insult to every soldier and sailor, an affront to all respectable elements in the city and a dishonor to the name of New York. When those boys return we ought to give them the outstretched hand of fellowship from those who stood with them in the war."

Rabbi Silverman said that he was entirely in accord with the purpose of the meeting and continued:

"Technically the war is not over. I know some who expressed themselves as pleased that Mr. Hearst had at last got what he deserved when he was appointed a member of this committee. We want every member of this welcoming committee to be 100 per cent. American, because this is a great opportunity for us to show our men how we appreciate the sacrifices they have made."

Alderman Arnon L. Squiers said he thought it "an outrage that the greatest city in the country should arrange a demonstration for the soldiers with 'such a man' on the committee," and continued:

"We cannot bring enough pressure on the Mayor to force Hearst off this committee, but if he had the slightest sense of delicacy he would resign. This committee has been in existence more than a month and a half and no action has been taken. There should be enough coöperation among the decent, self-respecting, and patriotic citizens to give the soldiers a fitting welcome, but the welcome of this committee now cannot be a citizens' reception because the most representative citizens have resigned in a worthy and just cause. Our protest is not partisan; the soldiers did not 'go over the top' as Democrats or Republicans, but as American citizens."

The members of the committee appointed by the Chairman, Charles Stewart Davison, who came to the meeting as a representative of the American Defense Society, were: Charles E. Lydecker, President of the National Security League; Dr. Manning, Dr. Silverman, Miss Maude Wetmore, Chairman of the National League for Women's Service; Mrs. John Blair, and Taylor More. Mr. Davison also will aid the committee in fixing a date for the mass meeting to be held before Jan. 15 and in finding a theatre where it may be held.

Those present at the meeting who will form a nucleus for the citizens' committee if Mr. Hearst does not resign from the official city committee were Dr. Manning, Dr. Silverman, Mr. Olcott, Mr. Davison, Taylor More, Henry L. West, Executive Secretary of the National Security League; Richard M. Hurd of the American Defense Society, John A. Dutton of the American Rights League, Appleton L. Clark, Alfred J. Ball, and Dr. C. O. Maillaux, all of whom resigned because of Mr. Hearst; Sidney Cohn, Elisha Hewitt of the Patria Club; Alden S. Thurston of the Military Training Camps Association, Alderman Arnon L. Squiers, Edward D. Appleton, who resigned from the committee; Mrs. Henry P. Loomis of the Colonial Dames of America, Lyman Beecher Stowe, Mrs. L. B. Stillwell, and Miss Mary Aldrich of the American Committee for Devastated France; R. A. Parke of the National League for Universal Military Service; Francis B. Stedman, Past Commander of Lafayette Post, 140, G. A. R.; L. Arnold Frye, Percival R. Moses, and George Hohn of the Patriotic Service League, and Henry W. Bonynge, President, and Oscar W. Ehrhorn of the Republican Club. Many others present who will become members of the committee left the meeting before their names were obtained by the Secretary. Other organizations represented were the New York Chamber of Commerce and the women's section of the National Civic Federation.

BAKER ATTACKED BY CHAMBERLAIN

Senator Says Measures for Caring for Returning Wounded Are Inadequate.

ASKS ABOUT DISBANDING

Criticises Failure to Let Soldiers and Country Know Demobilization Plans.

REVERTS TO OLD CHARGES

Asserts Events Justified Those, and Says He Complains Only for Good of Nation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—In the Senate today, in the course of a speech lasting nearly three hours, Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, which conducted an investigation a year ago into the activities of the War Department, declared that America was as unready at this time to handle the problems of demobilization as she was lacking in adequate preparation for going into the war.

Further, he declared that the War Department had failed to provide adequate hospital service for the men who are coming back wounded. He asserted that the department also has failed to see that returning soldiers were equipped with money.

The Oregonian's speech reflected the criticism he aimed at the War Department a year ago, when he accused it of having failed to make adequate preparations for winning the war. Later Mr. Chamberlain was accused by President Wilson of having "distorted facts" in the disclosures he had made to the Senate. Mr. Chamberlain today insisted that events had demonstrated that all he said a year ago was true.

The Oregon Senator spoke after Senator Shafroth of Colorado, an Administration supporter, had referred to the critics of the Administration a year ago, and had defended the War Department for what he called its "achievements in the war."

"Conditions today are not very unlike conditions which existed before Congress convened in December, 1917," said Senator Chamberlain. "At that time Congress was flooded with letters of complaint that the industrial life of this republic, so far as preparation for war was concerned, was absolutely not doing its duty under the direction of the War Department. Complaints are coming to us now not that our industrial life has not been successfully co-ordinated, but that now that the war has been won and our sons and brothers are coming back to America, armless and legless and eyeless, America is unprepared to take care of them, just as America was unprepared properly to conduct this war in such a way as to conserve life, energy, and health. God only knows how many lives have been uselessly sacrificed by our unprepared condition.

Treason and Treachery.

"The Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy on Jan. 11, 1918, disapproved the bill creating a Minister of Munitions, and the unpleasant controversy which occurred at that time, not personal in its nature altogether, is remembered at least by the members of the Senate. A vigorous protest was leveled against criticism of any of the departments. It got to be almost treason to dare to criticise anybody, except the Congress of the United States—and they have been criticised from the highest to the lowest in the land. It amounted almost to treachery, aye, indeed, the charge of treachery was leveled against one man who dared to criticise in this free country of ours.

"I, myself, passed under the ban, but without a single regret, and if my effort has saved the life of one young man on the battlefront of France I am willing to yield my seat in the Senate today. But that bill was disapproved; it was resented that the military establishment had 'fallen down,' that it had almost 'quit functioning' because of inefficiency in the Departments of the Government."

Senator Chamberlain said criticism of the War Department has been "reasoned all the time," and the criticism has achieved tangible results.

Senator Chamberlain alluded to his criticism in the Senate that money had been wasted in the aircraft production.

"I am saying nothing in malice, because I am very fond of the Secretary of War," he continued. "I know nearly everybody connected with the military establishment. Some of my warmest personal friends are there but what I do is to point out a way for the future, and see to it that the great post-war problems with reference to those who are coming back shall be solved promptly and correctly.

"Now that the armistice is signed, now that the lid has been lifted, we are able to turn the light on, look into the dark places and get evidence from incontrovertible authorities—and we know that every charge the Military Affairs Committee made was absolutely true."

Republican Patriotism.

Senator Chamberlain resented charges made in the Senate and elsewhere that the Republicans had shown partisanship in the inquiry into the War Department made by the Committee on Military Affairs.

"I do not know why it got abroad that that committee was partisan," he declared. "There were a number of Republicans on it, but the majority were Democratic. Now, so help me God, Mr. President, so long as I was serving on that committee, from the 4th of December through all of that investigation, I never saw a Republican at any time indicate a desire to take partisan advantage of what was transpiring. Every man was animated by the same desire. That desire was to assist those in authority in preparing our country to win this war. Criticisms by all, or by any of us, were made in the utmost good faith and in order to help, not to hurt. But there seemed to grow out of the situation that feeling. I have had Democrats upbraid me for indulging in criticism.

"Why, if the time ever comes when I cannot put my finger on the rascal in my own party and improve my party, and if the time ever comes when I must not use my judgment and must not criticise because it may hurt my party and not help my country, then I want to get out of public life, but I shall, so long as I serve my State, point out the things in this Government which I think are detrimental to my State and the nation. If it destroys my party I am willing to destroy it, if it will help to save the people.

"Criticisms by that committee were leveled not against the individual. I do not think there was a man on that committee who did not love the Secretary of War, a most lovable man but the criticisms were constructive, or intended to be constructive. If they hurt anybody, or in any direction, it is simply because it was inevitable under the conditions that then existed.'

The Oregon Senator spoke of getting hundreds of letters every morning from men in the army and from their mothers or wives complaining of lack of adequate treatment for sick and wounded men in the army, both here and abroad. Hundreds of thousands of these men, he said, will soon be back home, and they will "make their voices felt."

"Pursuing the dilatory policies we pursued during the war with reference to getting ready to fight," he said, "we are pursuing the same dilatory policies with reference to getting ready to take care of these young men.

"We are getting word from every hospital and cantonment that the conditions for taking care of these young men are bad. There are 179,000 of them, in round numbers. Where are the hospitals that they are going to put them in?

"What I am criticising is not having hospitals ready. We knew when we assembled these men in cantonments that they were going to be sick, but there were no hospitals prepared. Therefore, there were thousands of deaths that ought to have been avoided. We have not now hospitals prepared to accommodate all these wounded men who are coming back, and, therefore, we are going to have a great deal of suffering.

Legislation for Contractors.

"If we would pay one half the attention to preparing to receive these boys—I do not mean 'we'—I mean the War Department—if they would pay half as much attention to arranging to receive these boys as they are to get legislation through that would protect contractors, who have made contracts over the telephone, in violation of law, it would not take long to get something done."

As indicating the futility of attempting to enlist the help of Congressmen for soldiers, Senator Chamberlain spoke of a letter written by a soldier asking outside aid for his discharge, the soldier having tuberculosis. He said:

"That poor boy, suffering from tuberculosis, was brought up before a Board of Inquiry, and his pay was forfeited for fifteen days. He was punished for having had the temerity to write to a Senator asking for aid.

"That seemed to me to be such a terrible outrage that I went to see the Secretary of War about it. The Secretary took it up and reported to me that the punishment had been inflicted, and he could not relieve that, but that he had ordered the rules to be revoked under which the boy was court-martialed."

Senator Smoot told the Senate that a constituent of his had written him a letter, and that for doing it he was demoted from a Sergeancy, put back as a private, and censured.

Senator Borah remarked that he could not understand the long delay in getting out the casualty lists since the armistice was signed.

"It seems to me that within a short time after the armistice an accurate statement of the casualties could be made," said Senator Borah. "It is the agony of suspense that is even worse than the knowing."

"I am frank to say," replied Senator Chamberlain, "that from the evidence taken before our committee there was no excuse for all of it; there was some excuse for part of it."

Senator Chamberlain criticised the inequality of sentences meted out to private soldiers by court-martial. He told of a case where a soldier was sentenced to twenty-five years' imprisonment because he left camp without leave to see his sick mother before leaving for France.

"Now, Senators, I am not blaming the Secretary of War for this," said Senator Chamberlain; "I blame him only to this extent—that a word from him would stop that kind of business. I realized the necessity of maintaining discipline, but, in God's name, could not a boy like that have been punished a little less severely than a sentence of twenty-five years in prison, where his life must, by the very nature of things, be ruined?'

The Oregon Senator adverted to the case of a private in Company D, 155th Infantry, who was convicted of absence without leave from May 9 to May 15, after notification of his selection for overseas duty.

"It was shown that the boy had gone home to Mississippi to tell his folks good-bye," he said. "He was sentenced to dishonorable discharge and fifteen years at hard labor for doing it."

Failure to pay soldiers promptly was attacked by Senator Chamberlain. In some instances, he said, pay checks are two months or more late.

Soldiers in Politics.

"Now," he went on, "these boys are going to take a hand in politics in this country. They are going to hold somebody responsible for the neglect here, in all these things. And I want to say that if the occasion requires, I am going to find out where the responsibility is. If my Republican friends do not get us out of here before we can do it, they will do it, I am sure."

Senator Poindexter interrupted to say that he "might aid the Senator from Oregon in following out the conclusion as to who is responsible."

Mr. Chamberlain.—I should like to know, for I do not know.

Mr. Poindexter—The one man who is responsible for the Executive Department of the Government is the President of the United States.

Mr. Chamberlain—Yes, that's true; but that begs the question. The President is responsible for the execution of these laws, but the Senator from Washington knows very well that the President could not give these matters his personal attention. The President is responsible for the appointment of men upon whom devolves the discharge of these duties, which are not performed.

Senator Chamberlain, taking up the demobilization of the American Army, wanted to know if the War Department has made adequate plans for handling the problem.

"What I want to call the attention of the Secretary of War to,' 'he said, "is that the American Army, both in France and here, does not know what to expect. Not only the American Army, but the American people, ought to know exactly what they are to expect with reference to demobilization.

"I think we ought to follow in the footsteps of Great Britain. The day after the armistice was signed, Mr. McPherson, the Under Secretary of State for War, discussed this question in Parliament, and Great Britain adopted a policy with reference to the disbandment of the British Army. And between the 12th of November and the 23d of November, they had adopted a policy, and they sent men out to lecture to the soldiers to tell them what they might expect in the way of pay and when they were to be demobilized. There is not a cantonment in the United States where the soldiers can tell you that they understand what to expect. All of them expect something different.

"I am not blaming the Secretary of War, or anybody else, that our men are not let loose, because I do not know what the military necessities are now, but I am blaming them that they have not got a policy, and have not let the American people into it, so that they may know how to govern themselves.

"If that be treason, make the most of it. There is too much secrecy in the conduct of this war."

SECRETARY BAKER REPLIES.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—Secretary of War Baker expressed surprise tonight at Senator Chamberlain's allegation that the War Department had been deficient in caring for wounded soldiers. As to the failure to promptly pay all the soldiers in France, the Secretary explained that there had been delay. He cabled to Major Gen. Harbord at the port of embarkation at Brest recently, he said, urging that every effort be made to speed up the payment of all soldiers.

"You will recall that on my return from France," said Secretary Baker, "I caused a census to be made of the needs of the men returning from France on our transports, so as to ascertain exactly what they needed as to pay, clothing, and treatment. The result of this inspection was that we cabled to Europe that this was a matter to be corrected, and I believe that the soldiers now returning fare very much better than previously. I have been giving the matter of the treatment of soldiers in the hospitals, including the prompt payment of all wages due, my personal attention, and corrective measures have been ordered to be made immediately."

MAIL FLIER DIVES TO DEATH IN FLAMES

BODY CHARRED IN WRECK

Cuthbert Mills, the Victim, Had Made 175 Miles an Hour in Same Machine.

ROCKVILLE CENTRE, L. I., Dec. 30.—Cuthbert Mills, an aviator in the United States Air Mail Service, was instantly killed two miles north of this place today when the airplane he was operating collapsed at a height of more than 2,000 feet and plunged to the earth, burning as it fell and incinerating the body of the aviator. The airplane which Mills was operating when killed was known as the "Christmas Bullet," and recently on a test trial attained a speed of 175 miles an hour, at which rate the air journey from New York to Washington could be accomplished in less than two hours. The airplane was one of the fastest in the world, and it had been the intention of Mills to fly it over New York City and the battleships in the North River this week, probably on New Year's Day.

Mills was 25 years old and was an air veteran of more than six years' experience. He was rated as one of the most expert fliers in this country, and had been an instructor of pilots at army flying fields in all parts of this country. When Postmaster General Burleson authorized the air mail service between New York and Washington, Mills was one of the first civilian aviators to be accepted. He was on the way from Sperry Field, at Copiague, to Hazlehurst Field, near Mineola, when he met his death.

It was a little after 3 o'clock this afternoon when Mills left Sperry Field. Those who witnessed the start noticed that streaks of fire were being emitted and that clouds of smoke followed in the wake of the airplane. Otherwise the machine appeared to be working perfectly, and it quickly climbed to a height of about 2,000 feet and disappeared to the south in a great burst of speed. As the "Bullet" passed over Mineola aviators on duty at Hazelhurst Field noted the great speed. It was then about 3,000 feet in the air and headed in the direction of Rockville Centre. Immediately after passing over Rockville Centre, the Hazlehurst Field officers say, the engine went dead and immediately the airplane began to descend, collapsing as it hurtled through the air.

The wreck crashed into a tree. Thomas Rhodes, Quinn Parfert, and Edward Koehler of this place, who were hunting near the scene of the accident, were the first persons to reach the machine. They threw sand on the burning wreck and dragged out the charred body of the aviator. A few minutes later they were joined by Lieutenant Peter Ungerland of the army, who had witnessed the fall and who hurried to the place in an automobile. Calvert Mills, a brother of the dead man, and also an aviator of the mail service, reached the place a few minutes after Lieutenant Ungerland. The body was identified by a bank book which was in a leather wallet, the only thing on the body that was not burned. Calvert Mills collapsed after viewing the body of his brother, and is now in a hospital at Mineola.

Dr. W. W. Christmas, the designer of the "Bullet," was at Sperry Field when Mills took the air. He said he had instructed Mills to circle the field two or three times, and that if the machine was found to be in working order to fly to Mineola, where the machine was to have had its final tests before acceptance by the Government.

"We noticed," said Dr. Christmas this afternoon, "that the motor appeared to be working poorly, there being considerable back firing and smoke, and I expected Mills to come down after going around the field, but he was overconfident, evidently, that the motor would pick up, and headed toward Mineola. That was the last we saw of him. Only the other day he told me that it was his ambition to fly the 'Bullet' over New York and the battleships, and he expected to make that trip this week. He was one of the crack aviators of the country."

Mills lived with his mother, Mrs. Cuthbert Mills, at Fort Wadsworth, S. I. When he left home this morning he told his mother that he was going to make his fourth flight in the "Bullet." It was on Dec. 7 last that he broke the speed record at Mineola when he drove the machine over the measured course at 175 miles an hour. The body was sent to Staten Island yesterday afternoon.

M'KELLAR ATTACKS CRITICS OF WILSON

Senator Declares the American People and Allies Back President's Peace Aims.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—In an address to the Senate today, replying to recent speeches by Henry Cabot Lodge, the Republican leader, and Senator Knox of Pennsylvania, dealing with peace questions, Senator McKellar of Tennessee, Democrat, declared that the American people and the Allies indorsed all of President Wilson's fourteen principles and favored their incorporation in the coming peace treaty, and that the opposition of the Republican leaders to some of them might do incalculable harm.

Referring to the proposal to postpone at the Peace Conference settlement of the first four and the last of President Wilson's fourteen points—secret diplomacy, freedom of the seas, removal of economic barriers, disarmament, and a League of Nations to secure peace—Senator McKellar said of the Republican leaders:

"Their fears are unfounded; their opinions can work nothing but disaster to American aims and ideals at the coming conference. Announcement and publication of such views just in advance of the opening of the conference are calculated to mislead our allies as well as our former enemies."

Senators Lodge and Knox, Senator McKellar asserted, had virtually served notice that a treaty covering the five controverted questions would be rejected by the Senate.

"Each of these pronouncements," he continued, "was immediately approved by every leading statesman in Europe whose Government was co-operating with us in the war. Not one word of criticism, except by our enemies; not one word of dissent, except in Germany and Austria!

"Many Senators on both sides of this chamber gave out statements indorsing each and every one of the said pronouncements of our President. They were so just, so well put, so timely, that intelligent men everywhere indorsed them, * * * and even Germany, Austria, and Turkey, our enemies in this war, later came along and indorsed these principles and asked that the war be settled in accordance with them.

Referring to Senators Lodge and Knox, the Tennessee Senator continued:

"These two have come forward at this time, not to uphold the principles which they formerly applauded, not to uphold and defend the head of our Government in his fight for a righteous and enduring peace, not to uphold the high ideals for which our nation has so gloriously stood in this war, but to tear down, to disrupt, to postpone, and apparently to prevent, if possible, the fulfillment of the high aims and principles for which this country went into the war."

Ex-President Roosevelt, said Mr. McKellar, apparently had taken the position that England should control the seas, and he added:

"The Colonel, I am afraid, is allowing his hatred of the President to sour his nature and warp his judgment."

Regarding the proposal for a League of Nations, Senator McKellar said that he did not favor, and President Wilson had not advocated, a super-government, which would abolish the Monroe Doctrine or interfere with American sovereignty. But, he declared, it was feasible to secure an agreement for concert of action among nations for the prevention of war.

DANIELS URGES BIG NAVY PROGRAM

duced by $1,668,403,424.77, making the revised estimates before the committee $975,903,621.28.

Secretary Daniels read the committee a statement in which he emphasized his earlier recommendations for the authorization of another three-year building program, and gave his reasons for supporting it. His statement follows:

"No step backward, but a long step forward, should be taken by this Congress in strengthening the American Navy. The additional three-year program recommended in my annual report is a conservative one intended to continue the policy of steady upbuilding of the navy established in 1916. The General Board of the Navy, after extensive investigation and exhaustive consideration, has recommended a much larger program extending to the year 1925.

Opposes Year-by-Year Plan.

"While their recommendations are entitled to, and have received, very careful consideration, the Department has not felt justified at this time in recommending such an extensive program or one extending over such a long period. At the same time, a year-by-year program is not thought to be advisable; it is too much of the hand-to-mouth nature, and naval experts and thinking men interested in the navy have seen its unwisdom and in 1916 succeeded in substituting a better plan.

"As regards the larger vessels of definite types, the numbers of each type can now be fixed and have been recommended. I am asking that authorization be given for the construction of ten dreadnoughts, six battle cruisers, and ten scout cruisers to be laid down during the coming three years, and 130 other ships of such type and character as may give us a well-rounded navy.

"The initial appropriation need not be large, for work on some of the big ships already authorized was necessarily deferred during the war in order that work might be concentrated upon destroyers and like small craft and merchant ships. Now the construction of the big ships will be pushed as rapidly as possible, the number of small craft being ample until more dreadnoughts and other big ships are added to the naval force.

"As regards to these smaller vessels, a general authorization is requested in order that a study of all types produced by all nations during the war may be made and preliminary work may be done. In view of the large number of smaller vessels undertaken during the war which will continue to be constructed during the next year, it is not recommended that the construction of additional smaller vessels be pressed at this time.

Indorses 1916 Program.

"The details concerning them can be taken up subsequently. In this connection it should be pointed out that, although the program of 1916 extended over three years, the individual vessels to be undertaken in any specific year were specified each year by the Congress. It is expected and recommended that this practice be continued. My thought is, and it finds expression in the estimates, that, under present conditions, we ought to make no change in the naval program which the United States set for itself in 1916. We ought neither to commit ourselves to any gigantic expansion nor to recede from the wise three-year policy.

"It is our duty to consider the obligations imposed upon America if the Peace Conference now occupied at Versailles upon the greatest task which ever engaged the attention of a human gathering during the whole course of the world's history completes its work constructively and satisfactorily, as we all hope it will do. Let us assume that this conference will give birth to some plan looking toward a concert of the nations for the maintenance of peace, whether it be a League of Nations, according to the present acceptation of the meaning of that term, or what not. It will be some manner of body to which differing nations will perforce submit their differences for adjudication, and which will be sufficiently powerful to induce acceptance of its decisions when once they shall be made.

"The experience of poor and imperfect humanity has very fully taught the lesson that power for the enforcement of judicial decisions sometimes needs to be considerable; and back of that must lie a tremendous police power of prevention, if judicial decisions are to be made as infrequent as possible, indeed if society is to exist at all. Arbitration which had behind it no power capable of compelling the disputants to accept the decisions of the arbitrators would have no value whatsoever in cases of serious emergency.

America and World Police.

"I am quite certain that it would be improper for America even to consider the proposition of contributing to the world police a number of units smaller than that contributed by the greatest other power. It seems to me that this is obviously the American duty and that the other nations of the world would be justified in regarding us as shirkers if we failed to accept the burden of it cheerfully and turn to the performance of it with an unexampled earnestness and high efficiency. It would be contrary to all our traditions and all our ideals to assume that in the planning of a new and mighty navy America could be animated either by fear or by the intention of aggression.

"America is committed to the promise of entering into a general and genuine plan for the reduction of armaments. If the outcome of the Peace Conference shall be that all nations will concur in this idea, then the United States will gladly join them in the worthy plan. For three years we have been committed to such a program in such circumstances. But if such an agreement cannot be shortly arranged, then we here in America must accept the burden which the failure automatically will thrust upon us and meet it by adding such units to our navy as will secure our own safety and aid powerfully in protecting the peace of the world.

"Every year since I have been Secretary of the Navy I have urged an international agreement to end competitive and costly naval construction. The day for the realization of that long cherished idea seems not far distant. We are pledged to co-operate with other nations to a reduction of armament. Unless the nations now agree upon such conventions as will compel the settlement of national differences by arbitration, we will fail to garner the best fruits of the dearly bought victory.

"For one, I believe the war has taught us two things. First, that national differences and greed for power may always endanger the peace of the world; second, that to prevent differences and selfish ambitions from producing another war there must be constituted a high tribunal and there must be a world-police power so strong that no nation will dare to defy the strength of a decree of such an international tribunal."

After he had read his formal statement Mr. Daniels submitted a draft of a bill to carry out the new three-year building program. This calls for ten first-class battleships, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, $21,500,000 each; six battle cruisers, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, $23,500,000 each; ten scout cruisers to cost $7,350,000 each, and 130 small craft, the character and cost to be determined later.

Mr. Daniels proposed that the bill should contain the following provision:

"If at any time before the construction authorized by this act shall have been contracted for there shall have been established with the co-operation of the United States of America an international tribunal or tribunals, competent to secure peaceful determinations of all international disputes, and which shall render unnecessary the maintenance of competitive armaments, then, and in that case, such naval expansions as may be inconsistent with the engagements made in the establishment of such tribunal or tribunals may be suspended, when so ordered by the President of the United States."

In explanation of his recommendations about the smaller craft Mr. Daniels said:

"If Congress should depart from its traditions and trust the Department with large latitude, we would like to have authority to build some small craft, but would not be able to proceed completely until our engineers had made a thorough study at first hand of the value of small craft in the naval warfare abroad."

Mr. Daniels said that he had intended, with Admirals Taylor, Griffin, Earle, and McGowan, to go abroad early this month to make such a study, but the trip had been delayed on account of the signing of the armistice. Such a trip probably would be made shortly, he said.

There were 470 destroyers, building, or built, and all of the small craft could be finished by the end of June, 1920, the Secretary testified.

"How will you settle how large our navy shall be, if a league of nations is created?" asked Representative Butler of Pennsylvania.

"We ought to contribute in units, power, and men, just as much as any other nation and not allow any other nation to have more power than we have," replied Mr. Daniels.

Questioned About League.

Representative Venable, (Miss.) asked the Secretary if any definite plan had been agreed upon for putting force behind the judgments of the proposed League of Nations and wanted to find out just what the "jurisdiction of that court would be."

To this question Secretary Daniels made no definite answer.

"If we are to have any navy at all," said Secretary Daniels, "we need the most powerful one in the world to do the job if we should ever again be plunged into war."

"Do we need the most powerful in the world?" asked Representative Kelley, (Mich.)

"Absolutely," Mr. Daniels replied without hesitation.

"When did you come to that conclusion?" Mr. Kelley then asked.

"Until the outbreak of the war," said Mr. Daniels, "I thought that the capitalists and the laboring people would be strong enough, even in Germany, to overcome the influence of the militarists. When I found that I was wrong, I then saw the necessity of having the biggest navy in the world for the United States. In 1916, if we had possessed the facilities, I would have asked for an even larger program than was authorized by Congress.

"Looking back, I now see that it was a mistake to have even the second best navy in the world. I now think it is an indefensible thought to have any navy but the most powerful, if the Peace Conference fails to limit armaments."

The Secretary was asked if he thought the American people knew he had in mind making the American navy second to none in the world when he asked for the three-year building program of 1916.

"I think so," he said. "Many people thought I ought to have gone further then than I did."

"Do you think there is great diplomatic advantage to the United States in being able to say to England that it must agree to a limitation of armaments, or the United States will build a navy able to whip the British navy?" Representative Kelley demanded.

Expects Limit to Armament.

"I have great faith that when the Peace Conference adjourns there will be an agreement to limit armaments," Mr. Daniels responded. "If there is no agreement, then we must build the ships so as to have such a powerful navy that it would make any nation in the world think several times before venturing to attack us."

"Has England been building during the war?" was then asked.

Mr. Daniels said that England had one battleship 66 per cent. completed, and two others 10 per cent. completed, all of which were started since the war began. He explained that England's main attention was given to building destroyers while the war was in progress, to combat the German U-boats.

"How many of these projected ships would we need if the Peace Conferees agree to limit armaments?" Mr. Daniels was asked.

"Certainly those contemplated for the first year," he said. "We must expect to contribute our share to the international police force which undoubtedly would be organized."

Secretary Daniels said he was unable to state at this time the number of ships which would be kept in full commission, but would inform the committee of his decision on the subject as soon as he could confer with Admiral Benson, Chief of the Bureau of Operations.

As to enlistment, 250,000 men would be required, he said, of which number 60,000 would be assigned to the merchant vessels. Originally the United States Shipping Board asked for 131,000 men to man the vessels under its direction. By reducing the number of enlisted men, the Secretary said, he had been able to reduce his estimates for wages from $579,000,000 to $211,000,000.

By action of the Shipping Board on Dec. 13, the navy hereafter will be required to man only troopships to be commissioned and those now in the service. All cargo and steam ships to be commissioned hereafter will be manned by civilian crews, which the Secretary said might be obtained from the Naval Reserves now being demobilized.

The Secretary read a letter from the Shipping Board showing that the requirements of the board for the next year would be 36,000 men, or 3,000 a month.

Reductions in Estimates.

Secretary Daniels submitted revised estimates for this year's appropriations, which propose a reduction of the original estimates by $1,668,403,424.77. The original estimates submitted before the signing of the armistice proposed appropriations of $2,644,307,046.05, while the revised estimates amount to $975,903,621.28. Among the larger reductions are the following:

Strength of World's Navies Before the Armistice As Reported to Congress by Secretary Daniels

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—The sizes of the navies of the principal nations of the world, except Japan, previous to the signing of the armistice, were made known today by Secretary Daniels to the House Naval Affairs Committee. The final figures as to the strength of Japan's navy had not been compiled by the navy officials, and will be given out later.

The strength of the navies just before the armistice was signed, with minor and auxiliary craft eliminated, was given as shown in this table, which could be compiled only by disregarding many discrepancies in classification:

GAS TANK EXPLOSION KILLS 12, INJURES 3

Acetylene Plant Under Post Office at Lebanon, N. J., Shatters Frame Structure.

WOUNDED DIE IN FLAMES

Victims, Caught in Debris of Wrecked Building, Are Burned Before Firemen Can Give Aid.

LEBANON, N. J., Dec. 30.—Twelve persons were killed and three so seriously injured that they may die tonight when the explosion of an acetyline tank in the basement of the Post Office Building, a two-story structure, hurled the building into the air.

There were two blasts, the first blowing off the roof and shattering the walls and the second completing the ruin. Most of the killed were in the building and were buried under the débris. Flying woodwork and furniture injured others on the street.

Fire immediately succeeded to the explosion, preventing efforts at rescue of those pinned in the ruins and making certain the death of any who might have remained alive though caught in the wreckage. The flames for a time threatened to destroy several other structures, but were finally checked by the local fire apparatus and aid from neighboring towns.

The three seriously injured are an unknown man, Lester Apgar, and George Fannon, who was standing outside the building and was knocked down by the force of the explosion and showered with wreckage.

Lester Apgar, who was a son of Oscar Apgar, who was killed, was taken unconscious from the ruins before the flames reached him. All three of the injured are likely to die. They were taken to the Somerset Hospital at Somerset.

Some of those who were killed were in the Post Office and in a confectionery shop which occupied the ground floor. Two or three men at work on books in a lodge room on the second floor were among those killed instantly.

Every building in town was shaken by the explosion. The telephone operator in the nearest building was hurled against the switchboard, but she remained at her work and summoned fire apparatus and ambulances from other towns.

As soon as the fire was extinguished town and county officials began an investigation of the cause of the accident. Nothing of an explosive nature was known to be in the building except the acetylene tanks, but there was surprise that these tanks were capable of producing such a terrific explosion.

BOMB JUDGES' HOMES IN PHILADELPHIA

House of Acting Superintendent of Police Also Damaged by Explosion.

ANARCHISTS ARE SUSPECTED

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 30. — The homes of Justice Robert von Moschzisker of the State Supreme Court, Judge Frank L. Gorman of the Municipal Court, and Acting Superintendent of Police Mills, located in widely separated sections of the city, were damaged by bombs late tonight.

In each instance shrapnel bombs were used.

The force of the explosions was so great that all the occupants of the houses were hurled from their beds. No one was seriously injured.

The home of Justice von Moschzisker was practically wrecked by the explosion, which shattered nearly every window in the block.

Mrs. William G. Knowles, wife of Judge Knowles of the Municipal Court, who lives across the street from Justice von Moschzisker, was injured by the flying schrapnel. She was just entering her home after having attended the theatre when the bomb went off.

Mrs. von Moschzisker, who, with her husband, was hurled from bed, was struck on the head by fragments of the bomb, but was not severely hurt.

The explosions occurred just before midnight and within half an hour of each other. Acting Superintendent Mills, who lives in an apartment in West Philadelphia, was blown from his bed, but escaped with minor cuts and bruises.

Scraps of paper found in front of the Mills home expressed hatred of soldiers, judges, priests, and parasites. They declared that these classes of men subsisted upon the "stealings from brothels" and that their rule was at an end. It was supposed that the explosions were the work of anarchists.

The police were at a loss to explain the explosions. Details of police were hurried to the homes of United States Senator Penrose, Mayor Smith, the Judges of the Federal Courts, and other prominent citizens, for fear that they also might be attacked.

62 Lynchings in 1918, Increase of 24

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Dec. 30.—Sixty-two lynchings occurred in the United States during 1918, according to records compiled by Tuskegee Institute and made public tonight. The total, which includes 58 negroes and 4 white persons, is an increase of 24 over 1917. Five of the number lynched were women. Sixteen of those lynched were charged with assault or attempted assault, 14 with complicity in murder, 7 with murder, and 6 with threats to kill.

TICKET LAW IN EFFECT.

Swann Promises Quick Investigation of Theatregoers' Complaints.

The new ordinance affecting speculation in theatre tickets went into effect yesterday. The law requires ticket agencies to pay a license fee of $250 a year and not to charge a premium of more than 50 cents on any ticket. One of the problems that was referred to District Attorney Swann yesterday was whether a man who had bought a ticket at a speculator's price for a performance to be held after the law became operative could return and demand part of his money back.

It was decided that the law was operative as of yesterday and that no action could be taken because of extortionate prices, even though the performance was yet to be held.

The License Bureau has not yet obtained the application blanks for licenses. It has been ruled, however, that a written application for a license accompanied by the fee will be considered evidence of good intention and will hold until the license applications can be distributed.

District Attorney Swann said yesterday that the authorities expect citizens who are overcharged to make complaint. These complaints, he said, would be investigated promptly.

The commission will continue to act as a deliberative body to advise Mr. Keppel.

PEACE CONFERENCE TO HEAR RUSSIANS

REJOICES AT PERM VICTORY

Believes Money and Supplies All That Is Needed to Insure Success of Siberian Army.

PARIS, Dec. 30.—A hearing has been granted by the Allies to Russia in her request for representation at the Peace Confrence, Boris A. Bakhmeteff, the Russian Ambassador to the United States, told The Associated Press today.

"I am hopeful," he said, "that the sentiment of a majority of the Russian nation will be listened to and regarded by the Congress. The Ambassadors and other prominent Russians now in Paris feel that Russia comes to the Congress as a co-partner in victory. Without Russia the war could not have been won.

"Unfortunately, Russia collapsed before the war ended, and as there is no Government recognized at present by the Entente it is naturally impossible for any Russians to sign a peace treaty unless recognition should come before the signing. But we feel sure that Russian affairs will not be disposed of by the conference without heeding Russian public sentiment.

"Russia exists in spite of her misfortunes. The spirit of united Russia lives and is being fostered at Omsk, Archangel, Ekaterinador, and other centres. Russia will evenually right herself even without allied assistance, but she can recover more rapidly with aid from her allies, who need a united Russia to oppose German machinations through the Bolsheviki. A stable Russia is necessary to offset the spread of Bolshevism and to protect the Far East from disorder."

Ambassador Bakhmeteff and other Russians in Paris are delighted at the reports of the Russian victory over the Bolsheviki at Perm. They had expected this, as Admiral Kolchak, the leader at Omsk, had advised them of successful advances toward Perm.

The clear enunciation by French statesmen of the Entente policy toward Russia also is gratifying to the Russians, who express confidence that the various centres of Russian unity are growing stronger. Ambassador Bakhmeteff and his associates believe that money and supplies are all that is necessary to insure the success of the Russian Army in Siberia, which now numbers 100,000 men, 200,000 more recruited and awaiting equipment.

In the Ukraine, the Transcaucasus, and Kuban they believe that allied troops may be necessary, in addition to supplies and money, as the Russian union forces in those districts are fewer in number than the Bolsheviki. The territory also is so limtied that they cannot recruit extensively without a nucleus such as the Czechoslovaks supplied for the Russians in Siberia.

"It should be borne in mind," the Ambassador said, "that the Russians in the Black Sea districts have been opposing the Germans, and that the Germans spent money to incite disorder there. It is not a case of the Russians against the Bolsheviki. In the Ukraine the Nationalist movement from its inception has been Austrian, and Petlura, (the Ukrainian peasant leader,) who dominates the Ukraine from Kiev at present, is supported by the Central Powers. It will be seen that the Russians centring on Odessa face a difficult task."

Russia must eventually have a Government dominated by the farmers, in the opinion of M. Bakhmeteff and his associates, as 80 per cent. of the population is agricultural. Agrarian troubles in the Ukraine are expected to develop into a general revolt to upset the landlord system, as preserved by the Germans during their occupation. The land question in the Ukraine has not been settled as in the rest of Russia, and the peasants there demand land.

It was announced in a special dispatch from Paris which appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES on Saturday that the Allies had decided to send reinforcements to South Russia and that a strong expedition was under orders to join the French forces already at Odessa and occupy Ukraine.

SAYS OUR SOLDIERS SUFFER IN RUSSIA

Senator Townsend Quotes Colonel Vandercook as Authority—Wants Policy Explained.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—The policy of keeping American soldiers in Russia was criticised in the Senate today by Senator Townsend of Michigan, who put into the record a telegram from Colonel Roy C. Vandercook, Secretary of the Michigan War Preparedness Board, in which the latter spoke of the treatment of the American troops as being deplorable. Colonel Vandercook alluded to "many wounded soldiers as dying because of privations." He asserted that the soldiers "fight on empty stomachs and sleep in swamps and on snow."

"How long it will be that our troops will stay there, I am informed by an officer of high authority, will depend entirely upon the President," Senator Townsend went on. "He has that matter in charge, and it cannot be decided until after the Peace Conference, which, no doubt, will last for months. The disposition of Russia, it is hoped, will be settled at the Peace Conference, and in the meantime these troops will remain there.

"This officer says that our soldiers went there without Winter clothing, and he cannot speak for the food now, as that is entirely in the control of the British, the British commanding officer's word being law.

"What interests me and interests the people everywhere throughout the United States is why these soldiers are there, and what is this indefinite, speculative problem which has yet to be solved at the peace table by the President of the United States. It is a serious situation, but the authority who spoke to me about it says he is helpless at this stage of the proceeding to grant any relief or comfort to the people at home. I receive literally hundreds of letters and telegrams every day from the thousands of parents and friends in Michigan of these soldiers, who feel that their boys and their husbands are in that godforsaken country practically lost, so far as the United States is concerned.

"This whole thing rests with the allied forces in Europe, and the outcome will depend entirely upon the attitude of the President. I think the country ought to know what that is."

Senator Johnson of California, who offered the resolution in the Senate a few days ago calling upon the State and War Departments for information as to what the American soldiers are doing in Russia, said he had been "overwhelmed with letters on that subject," and that they showed "the heartaches and anguish of many American people over their lack of knowledge of their loved ones, who, without a declaration of war, are at present waging war in Russia."

The California Senator wanted, he said, to direct the notice of the Foreign Relations Committee, before which the resolution is now pending, to the fact that, in response to "an insistent popular inquiry in England, the British Foreign Office has told the people of England what Britain is doing in this regard."

"I wish to call their attention, too, to the fact that yesterday M. Pichon, the Minister of Foreign Affairs in France, told the French people what the French Government was doing," proceeded Senator Johnson. "The only Government on the face of the earth that does not take into its confidence its people is the Government of the United States."

LANSING, Mich., Dec. 30.—Governor Albert E. Sleeper, in a telegram addressed to several Michigan members of Congress today, called their attention to reports that United States troops, many of them from Michigan, are at Archangel in desperate straits. The Governor urged that the matter be promptly taken up with the War Department.

In his telegram, addressed to Senator William Alden Smith and Representatives Kelley, Cramton, and Fordney, the Governor said:

"We feel the Government ought to take measures at once to see that these men are provided with supplies and that their friends may be assured that they are provided with 'forces to meet the enemy.'"

DR. TANNER DIES AT 87.

He Fasted for Forty Days in New York City in 1880.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Dec. 30.—Dr. Harry Tanner, proponent of fasting for longevity, died Saturday at the Country Hospital after an illness of nearly a year. No relatives of the doctor have been found.

Dr. Tanner became the most talked of man in America when in 1880 he fasted for forty days in New York City. It was his practical application of his theory that health and long life depended upon long periods of fasting that brought him into prominence. He lived to be 87 years old. In 1880 the case of a Miss Mollie Fancher of Brooklyn, who had lain for ten weeks in a state of suspended animation, aroused a controversy and Dr. W. A. Hammond, former Surgeon General of the Army, said Miss Fancher was a fraud. He offered $1,000 if she would go without food for thirty days. Dr. Tanner offered himself as her substitute and under strictest medical watch he fasted for forty days.

NEIGHBORS CHEER THE SMITHS

Governor Tells Them He Will Stick to Oliver Street Home.

Because of his weakened condition the Governor-elect changed his plans of departure from this city, which were originally scheduled for today. He got word that his old Oliver Street neighbors intended giving him a hearty "send-off," and decided to start a day earlier, to reserve his strength for his inauguration.

But Oliver Street did not let its illustrious citizen get away without giving him a rousing send-off. A crowd collected in front of the Smith home and cheered lustily as each member of the family climbed into the waiting automobiles. The children, particularly, were the centre of a happy group. In saying good-bye to his neighbors Mr. Smith explained that he did not intend to close up his Oliver Street home, but would occupy it whenever he came to New York, and would use the Governor's Room in the City Hall as his office while in the city. It has usually been the plan for the Governor to stay in a hotel and make his headquarters there while in New York.

At the Grand Central Terminal the party was met by a group of photographers, who insisted that the Governor-elect pose for a picture. The family agreed and were soon formed in a group in the rotunda of the big station. Caesar, the Great Dane, took a violent objection to the proceedings. When the flashlight powder exploded he started for home, taking Alfred, Jr., with him. He was soon corralled, however, and brought back to the car.

A trainload of Democrats, mostly intimate friends of the new Governor, will go to Albany today to be present at the inuguration ceremonies. Among them will be Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall. Arrangements have been completed for the trip to Albany of the police band, consisting of eighty-five members, in charge of Lieutenant Floyd Pitts, for the inaugural ceremonies. They were invited by the Committee on Arrangements and will stay at the Kenmore Hotel in that city during the inauguration. The band will take part in the parade and will escort the Governor-elect from the Executive Mansion to the Capitol.

FAVOR FEDERAL CHARTERS

Tentative Program Now Under Consideration Provides for Regional Boards of Administration.

The Standing Committee of the Association of Railway Executives is to meet today at 61 Broadway for the purpose of smoothing out some details of the plan under preparation for the consideration of Congress, in respect to the future of the railroads. While the railroad men have made public little regarding their recommendations it was learned yesterday that the tentative program contains a number of details which differ radically from the pre-war method of managing and regulating the carriers.

A major feature of the program is a proposal that all railroads surrender their State charters and be reincorporated under the Federal statutes. A supplementary suggestion is that State supervision be entirely eliminated when the railroads are returned to their owners. The railroad plan would have the Interstate Commerce Commission continued in its present form, but through the selection of regional boards it would remove from the commission a great burden of details which for some years past have clogged the workings of the Commerce Commission.

The program, which has been discussed with bankers and, in respect to some features, with members of Congress, suggests that a new member be added to the Cabinet with the title of Secretary of Transportation. Through him and the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is understood, the proposal now being molded by the Association of Railway Executives would have the regulation of rates and also wages handled. An integral part of the tentative scheme is the suggestion that laws in respect to pooling of railroad traffic be repealed and also the anti-trust law as it refers to the railroads.

While the program provides that the railroads shall retain their entities, the regional boards shall have supervision of many details of regulation which would apply to the carriers in each distinctive region as a whole. All of these details, it was learned yesterday, are looked upon by their sponsors as forming merely the skeleton of a comprehensive railroad measure to be brought before Congress in the near future. As a matter of fact, several plans are under discussion by different groups of railroad authorities and bankers, and it is considered not improbable that the best features of two or more may be embodied in the final draft of a program for transferring the railroads from Government control back to their stockholders. The Association of Owners of Railroad Securities is understood to have practically completed a broad plan which contains features which have not been considered at length by the Association of Railway Executives.

The statement of railroad earnings for October, issued yesterday by the Interstate Commerce Commission, showed that net incomes were still decreasing. Under normal conditions, September was a better month than August, and October was inclined more favorably than September. Net income of the carriers for October of this year amounted to only $89,511,000, compared with $128,123,000 for August. The net earnings in October decreased $16,257,000, or approximately 15 per cent., compared with October of last year.

Higher wages and decreased efficiency by railroad employes are given as the cause for this steady decrease in monthly net. In October, operating expenses consumed 78.39 per cent. of gross earnings, against 67.9 per cent. for the same month of last year. October gross earnings, amounting to $489,322,000, compared with $488,135,000 for September, and $502,759,000 in August.

Operating expenses and net income of railroads for October are compared with the corresponding month of 1917 in the following table:

	1918.	1917.	Changes.
Gross...	$489,322,000	$382,587,000	+$106,787,000

Net inc.	$89,511,000	$106,768,000	— $16,257,000

Changes in gross and net by months for the year follow:

In times past the peak of the transportation business of the year has come in November, but it usually comes in October when crops are being rushed to market.

FOOTMAN STOLE AUSTRIA'S PLANS

"Leak" to the Czech Leaders That Long Puzzled the Government Is Now Revealed.

MASARYK FOR FEDERATION

He Is Said to Favor Union of All the Republics of Central Europe.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Dec. 29.—A characteristic story of Czech patriotic activities during the war is revealed by the Narodni List of Prague in a special issue in honor of President Masaryk's homecoming.

All through the war the Czech leaders were accurately informed about the most secret plans of the Austrian Government. The Viennese authorities knew, but could never discover how the Czechs obtained their information.

The mystery is now solved. A Czech footman named Douba, in the service of one of the Austrian Ministers, used to steal every night into his master's library, carry the documents he found there to his room, and copy them by morning. The copies he brought regularly to a Bohemian poet, Machar, who handed them over to Professor Masaryk, and, after the latter's flight, to the present Foreign Minister Benes, who smuggled them over the frontier. Even notes made by the Austrian statesman in question during the day invariably were in Machar's hands next morning.

Once Machar's flat was searched by the police, but he had concealed the papers beneath the carpet of his bedroom, and although Preminger, the Chief of Political Police, actually stood on them during the visit, they were not discovered.

The political situation in the Czechoslovak Republic, which all along has given promise of greater stability than have most of the new States that have risen from the ruins of the Central Empires, has been further consolidated by President Masaryk's arrival at Prague. It was recently reported from Vienna that President Masaryk had conceived a plan to form a federation of Slav States comprising the Republic of Bohemia, Poland, and Jugoslavia, and extending from the Baltic to the Adriatic. This Austrian report attributes to the Czechs' Pan-Slavistic ambitions which they do not entertain.

In truth, Masaryk favors a great federation of republics, not of Slav States alone, but rather of all the newly formed republics of Central Europe. Thus he desires to include Lithuania in this federation, although the Lithuanians are not Slavs, and he is willing to take the admission even of Hungary and German Austria into consideration, but the two latter countries can only hope to be received into this federation of Central Europe if they afford satisfactory proof that their political mentality has really changed, that their democracy is not camouflage, and that they have definitely renounced all desire of dominating their neighbors.

As yet there is, in the opinion of Czech statesmen, no sign that Hungary and German Austria have undergone such a transformation and have become reconciled to their future rule as States greatly reduced in territory and wealth. Masaryk's federative scheme, therefore, is still in a purely theoretical stage.

You Have Leisure To Think About Home "Fixin's" Now

Perhaps you've your own preconceived ideas of what the floor-covering you want should be; you will find that we have a happy knack of including that particular floor-covering in our stocks.

Perhaps you are rather vague as to the sort of rug you want for the Living Room, or Dining Room, or Bedroom, or whatever room it is; you will find that our Carpet and Rug Department fairly teems with suggestions for folks who "don't know just what they want."

And even though you may have been fortunate in receiving a goodly sum of Christmas money, which was "just like finding it," and therefore feel that you can afford to "splurge," it's a pleasant thing to know that one may "splurge" even more than one dreamed of, because our prices are remarkably low. That doesn't mean that qualities are proportionately poor—no, indeed! Quite the opposite.

McCutcheon's
January Linen and White Goods Sale—

IN some respects this is the most important Linen and White Goods Sale we have ever held.

By concentrating on the task of watching the Linen markets of the world during the four critical years just past, and knowing when and where to buy, we are this January in a position to offer our Patrons a large range of Household Linens of regular McCutcheon Quality at prices as low as, and in some cases lower than, they were a year ago, and this notwithstanding the marked increase in cost during the past year.

In our judgment Linen prices cannot change much for the better for two years, and we therefore strongly urge our Patrons to purchase, during this January Sale, such Linens as they need or are likely to need for themselves or for gift purposes during the coming year.

A Most Desirable New Year's Gift

The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse

By VICENTE BLASCO IBANEZ

It is the greatest novel in years, international in its scope, powerful in varied interest, merciless in its picture of national characteristics, "the most absorbing story you ever read."

WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS calls its author "easily the first of living European novelists outside of Spain. Is there no Frenchman, Englishman or Scandinavian who counts with Ibanez, and, of course, no Italian, American, and unspeakably no German."

Ferrenbach of St. Louis, Mo.

First Lieut. Field E. Kindley, Air Service. For extraordinary heroism in action near Bourlon Wood on Sept. 24. He attacked a formation of seven hostile Fokker planes and sent one crashing to the ground. A bronze oak leaf is awarded to him for the following act of extraordinary heroism in action near Marcoing on Sept. 27: Flying at a low altitude, this officer bombed the railway at Marcoing and drove down an enemy balloon. He then attacked German troops at a low altitude and silenced a hostile machine gun, after which he shot down in flames an enemy plane which had attacked him. Lieut. Kindley has so far destroyed seven enemy aircraft and driven down three out of control. Home address, Utzer Kindley, cousin, care Bank of Gravette, Ark.

Second Lieut. John H. Stevens, deceased, 147th Aero Squadron. For extraordinary heroism in action near Château-Thierry on July 2. Lieut. Stevens, with four other pilots, attacked twelve enemy aircraft flying in two groups well within the enemy lines. As soon as the enemy planes were sighted Lieut. Stevens manoeuvred to get between them and the sun, and with great difficulty gained the advantage. While three of the other American officers dived on the lower formation Lieut. Stevens and Second Lieut. Kenneth L. Porter engaged the upper formation in a bold and brilliant combat, two planes of which they crashed to the earth. Home address, Mrs. Effie Stevens, 21 State Street, Albion, N. Y.

First Lieut. Oscar B. Myers, 147th Aero Squadron.—For extraordinary heroism in action near Cierges, on Sept. 28. Sent on a particularly hazardous mission, he harrassed and routed enemy troops. He then climbed higher to look for German planes. With two other officers he encountered nine Fokkers protecting a reconnoissance machine, flying in one of the most effective formations used by the enemy. Outmanoeuvring the hostile planes, the three officers succeeded in routing them. After a quick turn Lieutenant Myers dived at the reconnoissance machine and crashed it to the ground in flames. Home address, S. Oscar Myers, 109 South Third Avenue, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

First Lieut. Benjamin L. Atwater, observer, 99th Aero Squadron.—For extraordinary heroism in action near Landres-A-St. Georges, on Oct. 5. He started on a photographic mission with Lieutenant Alexander, pilot, over the enemy's lines. Forced back by seven enemy pursuit planes, he determined to complete his mission, and recrossed the line eight minutes later. A large group of enemy pursuit machines again attacked his plane. Disregarding his wound, he operated his machine gun with such effect that the nearest of the enemy planes was put down out of control. Home address, Mrs. Ella C. Atwater, mother, 152 Maple Avenue, Red Bank, N. J.

First Lieut. Lansing C. Holden, 1st Pursuit Group. For extraordinary heroism in action near Montigny on Oct. 23. He was ordered to attack several German balloons, reported to be regulating effective artillery fire on our troops. After driving off an enemy plane, encountered before reaching the balloons, he soon came upon five balloons in ascension one kilometer apart. In attacking the first, which proved to be a decoy with a basket, his guns jammed. After clearing them he attacked the second balloon, forcing the observer to jump. His guns again jammed before he could set fire to this balloon. Moving on the third balloon at a height of only 50 meters, he set fire to and compelled the observer to jump. He was prevented from attacking the two remaining balloons by the further jamming of his machine guns. Home address, L. C. Holden, father, 888 West End Avenue, New York City.

First Lieut. Leslie J. Jobes, deceased, 115th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Verdun on Oct. 8. While in command of his platoon during an engagement of the 29th Division in the Verdun sector he displayed exceptional bravery, disregarding his own safety and encouraging his men, by both words and action. While leading his platoon in an attack on a machine-gun nest he was instantly killed, but the attack begun by him continued and resulted in the machine-gun nest being captured. Next of kin, Mrs. M. C. Jobes, 1,309 Bloomfield Street, Hoboken, N. J.

Second Lieut. Cleveland W. McDermott, 147th Aero Squadron.—For extraordinary heroism in action near Bantheville on Oct. 18. In starting on a patrol mission he was delayed by motor trouble. Unable to overtake the other machines, he continued on alone. Sighting an enemy Fokker, he immediately gave chase, and despite its effort to escape succeeded in shooting it down. Six Fokkers then suddenly attacked him, and though he was outnumbered and blinded by the sun, he shot down one of them and scattered the others. In the midst of this combat his motor stopped, and he was forced to glide into friendly territory. Home address, John McDermott, father, 209 Jackson Street, Syracuse, N. Y.

First Lieut. Ralph O'Neill, pilot, 147th Aero Squadron.—For the following act of extraordinary heroism in action near Fresnes, on July 24, a bronze oak leaf is awarded to Lieut. O'Neill, to be worn on the Distinguished Service Cross awarded to him Oct. 12. Lieutenant O'Neill, with four other pilots, engaged twelve enemy planes discovered hiding in the sun. Leading the way to an advantageous position by a series of bold and skillful manoeuvres, he shot down the leader of the hostile formation. The other German planes then closed in on him, but he climbed to a position of vantage above them and returned to the fight and drove down another plane. In this encounter he not only defeated his opponents in spite of overwhelming odds against him, but also enabled the reconnoissance plane to carry on its work unmolested. Home address, Mrs. R. L. O'Neill, mother, 218 Sonoita Street, Nogales, Ariz.

Lieutenant Lansing Colton Holden, Jr., son of Lansing C. Holden, an architect, of 103 Park Avenue, entered the Princeton Aviation School while in his sophomore year at the university, and in August, 1917, was graduated with honors from the aeronautical school. He completed his training overseas and was commissioned last March. He is Flight Commander of the 95th Aero Squadron and an ace, being officially credited with seven air victories. From April to July, 1918, he was on detached service with the French Escadrille guarding Paris and from then to the close of the war was with the American forces.

RISE FOR TELEGRAPHERS.

McAdoo Readjusts Schedule—Rule Applies to Station Agents.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—To railroad telegraphers and station agents were given a further wage increase today by Director General McAdoo, retroactive to Oct. 1.

Under the previous order, to which telegraphers throughout the United States objected, even threatening strikes, the basis for calculating increased pay was made by dividing the rate in effect Jan. 1, by the number of working days in the year, which included generally Sundays and holidays. Under the new order, this divisor is 306, which eliminates Sundays and holidays. To this new basis is to be added the 13 cents a hour advance granted by the former order.

The new order also applies to station agents, but excepts agents whose duties are purely supervisory and those at small non-telegraph stations.

The supplement provides for payment on the eight-hour basis, with overtime at the rate of time and one-half. This overtime rate does not apply to work Sundays and holidays, however.

"This order," said Mr. McAdoo, "will go far toward eliminating Sunday and holiday work wherever practicable and toward reducing such work, where it cannot be eliminated, to the fewest number of hours."

HOLT SAILS FOR PARIS.

Will Watch Congress Proceedings for the League to Enforce Peace.

Hamilton Holt, representing the League to Enforce Peace, sailed yesterday on the Baltic on his way to Paris to observe the proceedings of the peace conference.

Oscar S. Straus and other members of the Peace Congress Committee of the league will sail next week.

Mr. Holt said that after the delegates had formed a working understanding with the overseas organizations they would do all they could to support President Wilson in his efforts to have the league's principles incorporated in the peace treaty.

"Our second duty," Mr. Holt continued, "will be to send back to the United States information which will be used to combat adverse sentiment in this country and prepare the American people for acceptance of the League of Nations idea.

In Paris Mr. Holt will also act as one of the representatives of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and of the Church Peace Union. Both organizations have declared in favor of a League of Nations and are conducting campaigns among the churches.

SAVOY SHOP HAS DAYLIGHT HOLDUP

Ex-Sailor Arrested as Companion Gets Away with Cash and Liberty Bond.

TWO WEEKS OUT OF SERVICE

Pursued Through Hotel to Fifth Avenue, Man Is Caught Near Metropolitan Club.

The series of robberies, or so-called crime wave, which reached its maximum apparently in the recent East Brooklyn Savings Bank murders, has by no means spent itself, according to the police, who pointed out yesterday that robberies were still reported daily. Another daylight holdup yesterday failed of complete success when a glass of water overturned opportunely in a quiet drug store where one thief had sought to distract attention from his companion. The upshot was the capture of one of the men, who was a discharged sailor of the United States Navy.

It was at Ramsdell's drug store, in the Hotel Savoy, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, that two men entered at 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning, and one of them, a short, dapper youth, asked to see some military brushes. The cashier, Miss Mathilda Finsterer, noting that the clerks were busy, left her inclosed desk to make the sale.

The second man, tall, neatly dressed, with a fur coat over his arm, idled at the cashier's desk. When the little man wanted the cashier to show him some goods at the far end of the shop Miss Finsterer exclaimed: "But those are not men's brushes!"

Just then the tumbler of water which she had left on the cash desk fell to the floor. With the crash of glass she saw the tall idler withdrawing his hand from the cashier's window. In his hand was a pasteboard box containing $238 in cash and a $100 Liberty bond of the last issue.

Both men ran through a door connecting the drug store with the hotel and escaped to the street, with the cashier close behind shouting "Stop thief!"

In the commotion caused by the cashier's cries and those of the two middle-aged clerks the short man disappeared. With him, the police think, went the $238 and the Liberty bond.

Policeman Donohue of Traffic Squad C saw the taller man dash out of the hotel, followed by the cashier, and he arrested the man in front of the Metropolitan Club.

At the West Fifty-first Street Station, on the complaint of the cashier, the man was locked up on a charge of robbery. He said he was Donald Lloyd, 28 years old, of 228 West Sixty-eighth Street. In searching him, the police did not find the missing money. They found discharge papers from the United States Navy, dated two weeks ago, and a New York State automobile license card. Lloyd, it was said, was the owner of a taxicab, which he purchased several days ago for $900.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty before Magistrate Frothingham in Yorkville Court and was held in $2,000 bail, pending a further police inquiry. Since the police thought he might have knowledge of other daring robberies committed recently, Lloyd was taken to the Detective Bureau at Police Headquarters, where he was questioned at length by Inspector Gray.

At Police Headquarters last night it was said that nothing had developed in the police investigation of the robbery which would connect Lloyd with other recent thefts.

Joseph Cohen; 38 years old, of 184 South Fourth Street, Brooklyn, was locked up in Police Headquarters last night charged with being a fugitive from justice in Chicago and with receiving stolen goods. He was arrested by detectives yesterday when he called at the Federal Reserve Bank, Nassau and Pine Streets, in answer to a decoy letter, which stated that the cash was ready for a $1,000 certificate of indebtedness that he presented there on Dec. 23.

The certificate was one of a total of the $105,000 in certificates stolen from the Argo State Bank, Argo, Ill., on Sept. 20, by five men. Cohen presented the certificate to the Treasurer of the Federal Reserve Bank, and on getting a receipt was told to call again in a few days. Communication with the Federal Reserve Bank in Chicago showed that the certificate had been stolen. Cohen told the police that the certificate had been sold to him here by a man named "Thompson" for $900. Three of the holdup men who robbed the Argo bank are now in custody in Chicago.

Following a conference held yesterday between Police Commissioner Enright and the heads of the detective bureaus, it was learned that plans had been worked out to head off the reported wave of crime spreading through the city. Police Commissioner Enright, however, said that statistics showed that there was less crime now than at the same time last year or the year before. The conference was held at the office of Deputy Police Commissioner William Lahey. Suggestions for improvement in detective work were submitted, and many of them will be put into operation immediately, it was said.

CLUB HAUNTERS!

Invest in Some New Conversation

You are a soothing fixture at your club—yes! You, your newspaper, and your favorite chair have been there since the corner-stone was laid. You discuss the war loans sonorously with Jones. You call Senator Hawkins "Jim" when you order him a horse's neck. The club regards you as a standby and a good fellow; even, perhaps, as its social centre. But . . . . . at a dinner-dance, a tea, a supper-party . . . . .

Quick! Waiter, Page an Alienist!

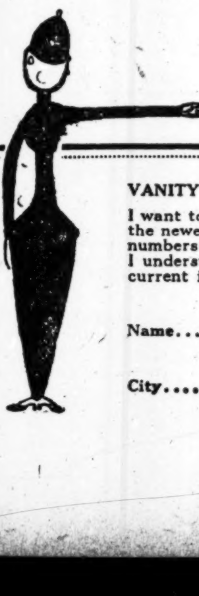
You wilt at the name of Thamara Swirskaya. You think Ben Ali Haggin was a prophet about the time of the Arabian Nights; that Valda Valkyrien is a Danish seaport; that Paul Manship has an office on Wall Street. Caproni triplanes, Russian dances, poetic drama, make you long for speedy oblivion.

In the hands of a clever little debutante, you are helpless; the sight of your hostess makes you flinch; and how—and of what—can a man talk to a belted earl?

And yet it's so simple, so easy, to be a wit, instead of a dead wire. To make dowagers beam on you, debutantes dream of you, poets dedicate their masterpieces to you, Uncle Reginald leave you his millions.

All you need to do is to tear off that coupon and spend a single dollar for six issues of the forward-marching magazine of modern American life—its arts, sports, dances, fashions, books, operas, gaieties, and humors: Vanity Fair.

Vanity Fair costs $3 a year—35 cents a copy. There is more joyous fun-making and mental stimulation in one single copy than in fourteen yards of Bergson or Ralph Waldo Emerson. Yet, if you do not know Vanity Fair, or would like to know it better, you may have five whole copies for an insignificant dollar bill—six, if you mail the coupon at once.



Five Issues of Vanity Fair for $1
Six, if you mail the coupon now

VANITY FAIR, 19 West 44th Street, New York City

I want to go through life with my mind open; to keep my sympathies warm; to keep in touch with the newest and liveliest influences of modern life. Therefore, I want you to send me the next FIVE numbers of Vanity Fair. I will remit $1 on receipt of your bill (OR) my favorite dollar is inclosed. I understand that if this order is received in time, you will send me a complimentary copy of the current issue, making SIX issues in all.

TO OUR PATRONS

NOW, at the close of 1918, we take the opportunity of expressing to the trade and the public our appreciation of the forbearance shown us during the period of the War.

The Government having taken our entire enlarged production of razors for the army overseas, it was impossible for us to deliver any razors for civilian use. Deliveries are now being made regularly, and the public should experience no difficulty in securing the AutoStrop Razor.

FIND NEW PUZZLES IN REVENUE BILL

Individuals and Corporations Appeal to Experts for Explanations.

HARDSHIPS IN PROVISIONS

Measure as Now Drafted Meets with Widespread Opposition to Features That Interfere with Business.

The new Revenue bill, drafted by the Finance Committee of the Senate and soon to be sent to a Conference Committee of the Senate and House, probably is being studied with more care by more persons all over the country than any other measure before Congress in a long time. The pending bill is so filled with complexities that experts in financial institutions, collectors of internal revenue and lawyers who have made taxation a study are swamped by individuals and corporations desiring information as just how the new Revenue bill will affect them.

In many of the larger financial institutions of New York special men have been added to the staffs to keep track of the bill as it has been and will be amended, and to answer questions regarding it. The more these experts study the measure the more inequalities they find. One day some expert finds a way for some taxpayers to beat the tax collectors. The next day another expert finds that the bill in its present form inflicts great and seemingly unnecessary hardships on another class of taxpayers. Indeed, provisions of the bill were cited yesterday which, if they are not altered before the final passage, may result in putting many persons out of business. William Berker, the tax expert of the Bankers' Trust Company, until recently one of the Government's income tax experts, called attention to one of these so-called hardship provisions.

It was the case of a partnership that had been brought to his attention, and that it may not be identified the amount of capital and profits here given are hypothetical. Two men concluded they could make money out of war contracts. They formed a partnership and obtained contracts. Each put into the business $10,000. They have made profits this year of $40,000. But they do not dare divide these profits between them, for they must find peace time employment for their plant and be financially prepared for the period of reconstruction. Therefore, the partners decided to take $5,000 apiece for their personal expenses, leaving $30,000 of profits in the bank to provide for any emergency that may arise.

But, according to a provision of the Revenue bill, the Government will tax these profits whether they are divided between the partners or not. That is the whole $30,000 of profits will be taxed. And the tax on $30,000, as fixed by the bill, is $7,730. Mr. Berker said that there are many cases of this kind all over the country. The partners suffer because if each takes his profit he is taxed and if he leaves it in the business, getting no personal benefit from it and his labor, he is taxed also. In the case of a corporation on which Mr. Berker was working, the organization, under the bill as it now stands, will have to pay several thousands more than its entire profits for 1918, as they are now for eleven months and estimated for December. No corporation can continue, of course, to pay taxes long on such a basis and continue in business.

Warning Against High Taxes.

It was hardships such as these which the provision of the bill impose that led the President of one of the large banks to say: "Of course, if you tax capital out of business you tax labor out of employment. A just tax is something that the people of no nation will complain of, but a tax that may make it impossible for many employers of labor to continue their employes at work the people of any nation ought to object to, and I believe the people of this nation will be heard from before this bill passes. A tax that threatens the prosperity of labor ought to have the serious consideration of every man and woman in this country who has to work for a living. I wish organized labor would study this Revenue bill. Adam Smith, sometimes called the father of taxation, was sound when he said:

"'Every tax ought to be levied at a time or in a manner in which it is most likely to be convenient for the contributors to pay it. Taxes on such consumable goods as articles of luxury are all finally paid for by the consumer, and, generally, in a manner that is very convenient to him. He pays them little by little, as he has occasion to buy the goods. As he is at liberty to buy or not to buy, as he pleases, it must be his own fault if he ever suffers any considerable inconvenience from such taxes.'

"Now I am not an expert, but I believe the amendment to the present bill, offered by Senator Reed Smoot of Utah, would be favored if it could be submitted to them by a big majority of those who possess moderate incomes or moderate profits that must be taxed under any revenue. Senator Smoot's amendment provides that every retail merchant shall charge his customers 1 cent additional on every dollar's worth of goods purchased. Nobody would feel such a tax as that, because, as Adam Smith said, 'it would be convenient to pay.' It is estimated that such a tax would provide a revenue of $1,250,000,000. I'd like to hear from the people of the country on the Smoot amendment."

It was also pointed out yesterday that the provision of the bill which allows deductions from taxes levied under it to be made for depreciation in the value of securities affords a way for the taxpayer to beat the Government. Recently there has been a slump in the price of securities. Any holder of one for which there is a market price lower than that at which it was purchased may sell it today and buy it back tomorrow, and show a loss in his tax return. The selling and buying will cost the revenue payer, all told, the broker's commission of ¼ per cent.

Can Cut Bill Down.

A case was cited yesterday where a man who has an income of a little more than $30,000 a year, on which, under the proposed bill, he would pay a tax of $4,930, had figured it out that he could sell and buy back securities in the manner described and show losses sufficient to bring his revenue tax bill down to between $200 and $300. There seemed to be a pretty general opinion in the financial district yesterday that the bill ought to be amended so as to make the species of profiteering impossible. This feature of the measure was brought to the attention of William H. Edwards, Internal Revenue Collector for the Second District, yesterday through a letter sent out by a firm of brokers which was looking for this sort of new business. The letter follows:

We are informed by entirely reliable sources that the present form of the income tax law now pending in Congress allows the individual to deduct any loss incurred during the year 1918 from any income received during that year, regardless of the sources from which the income is derived. It seems probable at the present writing that the law will go through in this form. This is radically different from the previous law, as you will recall that the old law allowed deductions for losses to be made only against profits.

We thought you might be interested in the above, and that possibly you could use the information to advantage, through the actual cashing in of some loss between now and Jan. 1, which you might otherwise have intended to leave open. We should be glad to give you any other information in our possession in regard to this, if you so desire.

"The new revenue act has not yet become a law," Collector Edwards said in commenting upon the firm's circular, "and there is no telling what its final shape will be. We are getting revisions and amendments every day. Therefore no firm can guarantee to its clients any positive information."

DRAMA

Spook Melodrama.

Barker	Daisy Vivian
Morton Grant	Frank Andrews
Richard Bransby	J. H. Gilmour
Dr. Latham	H. Cooper Cliffe
Helen Bransby	Flora Macdonald
Hugh Brooke	Robert Barrat
Stephen Pryde	Percy Marmont
Angela Hilary	Marion Rogers
Mrs. Leavitt	Mabel Archdall

It sounds like a good idea to make the spirit of the departed an Avenging Fate of melodrama. Perhaps it is a good idea. One can imagine this Fate (as doubtless Walter Hackett imagined it) a spooky presence, quite unseen, yet strangely swathed in uncanny light. It vaguely weighs upon the conscience of the villain and bids fair to unman him.

It buoys up the souls of hero and heroine with the promise of a spirit message that will release them from their agony of suffering; yet it cannot quite convey the word which they (and the audience) are breathlessly awaiting. And one can imagine the moment when the wireless receiver in their brains is finally attuned to the transmitter from beyond, so that the fatal message is flashed through, to the crushing despair of the villain and the triumphant joy of the star-crossed lovers. One can imagine a great deal, in fact, (as no doubt Mr. Hackett did,) which is not conveyed in the new play at the Harris.

Never was a soaring, soul-stirring idea treated in a more pedestrian manner. A defalcation has been committed in a fashion which (to the people on the stage) seems to implicate one of two brothers; yet to the audience it is plain as the sign on the front of the theatre that the thief is the much respected brother. At the end of the first act their uncles divines the truth. As in "Jim the Penman," the villain betrays himself by unconsciously writing his brother's name as a forged autograph.

(Really, the villains of melodrama should have some slight education in the melodramatic classics! A case of heart disease has been laboriously "planted" upon Uncle, and the shock of this discovery carries him off. But not until he has managed to place the proof of our hero's innocence in a volume of "David Copperfield, which is ostentatiously put back in the bookcase by the mistress of the house—upon whom the habit of tidiness has been 'planted.'"

Before the death of Uncle, the idea of his spiritual return has been prepared with equally prosaic insistence, so that when the first curtain descends the only folk in the house who do not know what is coming are those on the stage. And in the two following acts it all comes, as per schedule.

Once when the shifting of weird lights became unusually erratic, a hope was born that some unexpected apparition was imminent. But it did not come. It was not on the timetable. To everyone on the stage the Foe remained invisible still.

A number of competent actors dealt competently with the material provided them and were cordially applauded by their friends in the audience. But their real foe, the author, remained even more invisible than the title part.

MARK SWAN'S FARCE RAPID.

KEEP IT TO YOURSELF, a farce in three acts, by Mark Swan, from the French of Keroul and Barre. At the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre.

Charlie	Dallas Welford
Dr. Dubois	Robert Lowe
Edouarde Chaumet	Edwin Nicander
Dr. Ferdinand Brodard	Alphonz Ethier
Amelie Brodard	Ethel Stanard
Marie	George Hall
Francois	John Burkell
Marguerite Chaumet	Helen Holmes
Raphael	Macey Harlam

"Keep It to Yourself," played here for the first time last night at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, is a first-rate example of the art of the farce builder. It is from a French original, and its characters are the customary puppets of Continental farce, but either the original authors or their adapter, Mark Swan, have been particularly fortunate in their invention of miscellaneous incident, and the result is a swiftly moving and frequently hilarious composition, even though it introduces nothing new.

Its protagonists are a honeymooning couple and a hypnotically inclined gentleman who is not always responsible for his actions, which are, perhaps, sufficient indication of the character of the entertainment. If further description be necessary, it might be added that the first act passes in a hotel in Ostend. The play is very much of the weave of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," and, indeed, quite the equal of that piece in the speed with which its complications follow one another. It calls for no very extended description. Those who care for bedroom farce, and they are legion, are quite certain to flock to it.

The company is generally able and includes a number of well-known performers. Edwin Nicander has full scope for his farcical talent in the rôle of the hypnotic subject, and Alphonz Ethier is the thundering farce husband to perfection. Dallas Welford contributes an amusing characterization of an absent-minded waiter to the first act, but Macey Harlam, as a more romantically inclined waiter in the later acts, had less scope for his talents. Certainly his métier is anything but farce. Ethel Stanard looked her prettiest as the young wife, and Albert Brown and others contributed in lesser degree to a successful evening.

"THE MELTING OF MOLLY."

Judy	Mrs. Charles G. Craig
Mrs. Carter	Maude Turner Gordon
Dot Carter	Gloria Goodwin
Molly Carter	Isabelle Lowe
Tom Morgan	Ted Lorraine
Ethel Morgan	Marjorie Dunbar Pringle
Judge Wade	Frank Kingdon
Doctor Moore	Charles Purcell
Athletic Instructor	Vera Roehm
St. Clair McTabb	Edgar Norton
Miss Chester	Alison McBain
Guest	George S. Trimble

Charles Purcell's voice, Isabelle Lowe's personality, and Gloria Goodwin's dancing are the principal things of importance in "The Melting of Molly," which opened at the Broadhurst last night. In addition, there were contributions of comedy from Mrs. Charles G. Craig and Edgar Norton, and some acceptable singing and dancing by Ted Lorraine and other members of the cast. Also several amusing situations are developed, or rather spring, out of nothing in the play, and a number of the songs are musical—others catchy.

"The Melting of Molly" attempts to be a play with music, something after the order of "Maytime," but, although the music often equals and occasionally surpasses what might be expected, the play breaks apart every time any dramatic strain is put upon it and is only saved by a hurry-call for some speciality that gets the house interested again.

The story sounds well enough. Molly loves Alfred Bennett, serious, slim, self-satisfied, and strict as to matters of diet and decorum. Alfred goes away on a diplomatic mission and Molly waits for him for four years, in which time she eats and grows fat. Then she receives word that Alfred intends to return to marry his "lily," and realizes that her too, too solid flesh must melt. So she goes to Dr. Moore's sanitarium for ladies of size and loses forty pounds in three months. She also loses her heart to the doctor, but goes gamely ahead toward her wedding to Alfred. When Alfred comes, however, he is not the man who went away. He has found food good and shows it. Molly describes him when she turns from him exclaiming, "You Hippodrome!" So she marries Dr. Moore, as everybody knew all the time she would.

This story was cut up into pieces, parts of other plays and bits picked up here and there were added, and the whole was shaken up in a hat and poured out. Result, the prologue and three acts of "The Melting of Molly."

But the jumble is enjoyable in a number of spots because of what the principals are and do.

LOWELL DISCUSSES LEAGUE OF NATIONS

HE MET THREE OBJECTIONS

Says Washington Asked Peace for States as World Does Now—No "Small Nation" Rule.

President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard University, speaking before the Society of Arts and Sciences at the Hotel Biltmore Sunday night, urged the formation of a League of Nations in order that justice might be attained in the world, his remarks forming part of a debate that aroused much interest and further discussion yesterday.

"There are one or two difficulties which confront us when we consider the formation of a League of Nations," he said. "People ask, 'Of what nations shall such a league consist?' The organization which I belonged to for three and a half years has taken great pains not to answer that question, believing that the answer would depend largely upon the issue of this war—and I believe that the war has settled that issue.

"A perfect League of Nations, in a perfect world, would undoubtedly be one where all mankind was organized into free nations and all were bound together in a great league of humanity. But one does not begin with perfection. One begins with the existing things, and it is surely obvious today that the only nations that can initiate a League of Nations are the nations that have won this war. They may let in others whenever they prove themselves trustworthy, and we hope that many nations will prove themselves trustworthy, but it is not necessary to go too far at once.

"Now I want to take up two or three objections very commonly suggested to a league of nations. One is that 'Washington never did so in his day.' Now, what did George Washington do in his day? He tried to prevent war. For, mind you, before the adoption of the Constitution, we were very close to war between many of the States, and doubtless war would have come. He tried to prevent war by welding those States together in such a way that they would not fight with one another. That was as far as it was wise for him to go.

"We were drawn into a war which began between Russia and Germany. We are nearer nowadays, and there is scarcely any part of the world so remote as the two ends of those thirteen Colonies were. Let me say this: Washington was a great man, because he looked the facts of his day in the face, and we are only worthy to be his descendants if we look the facts of our day in the face.

"The second objection which is raised is this: It will interfere with our sovereignty. It has nothing whatever to do with our sovereignty. People say Congress has not the power to declare war or refuse to declare war. Congress's power to declare war or not to is not in any way affected. We simply agree that in certain conditions we will declare war, but Congress is not bound to do it. It does not interfere with Congress in the least. It does morally bind Congress to declare war, yes, certainly, every treaty morally binds the country to do something.

"More treaties, each of them binding the country to do or not to do certain things, have been made in the last fifty years than in all the history of the world before. Why? Because countries have found it was worth while to bind themselves if others were so bound also.

"Now, there is a third objection that I want to take up which is always brought forward. How about the big and little nations? Is it seriously supposed that any one is going to allow nations in a league of nations—to allow nations like Guatemala, for instance—to have the same votes as the United States? It is easy enough, in a consideration like that, to say it is absurd and throw it down. But no sensible person would believe that was to be done for one moment.

"We are told again that our men will have to go and fight in every broil in Europe. But, surely, the object of the League of Nations is to prevent broils in Europe. If the league will not prevent them then it is a failure. But does any one doubt that a league made of the great nations of the earth can stop any broils in Europe? The object of such a league is to prevent war. Of course, if the league will not prevent war then it is a failure. But it will.

"A man cannot be an orderly citizen in a disorderly community, and the trouble with us in the present day is that certain nations are trying to be orderly and decent in a disorderly condition of the world. The nations of the world are in just the same situation that you would have been in in a frontier town of the olden days, when it was necessary for you to carry a pistol. There is only one way to stop it, and that is to make the world an orderly one.

"And I want to ask you, are the resources of civilization exhausted? Is this sort of thing bound to repeat itself every little while? Are the most civilized races in the world going to try to exterminate each other with ever-increasing ferocity and ever-increasing ingenuity of weapons? Is the manhood of the next century to be devoted to seeing how much more wicked we can be?

"Are we to develop the one horror that did not take place in this war, but was talked of, and that is dropping poison bombs from airplanes on undefended citizens? Or, is it possible, is it inconceivable, is it folly, to say that the world can be brought to a state of peace and orderliness in which scraps between the nations occur no more than scraps among the inhabitants of the town of New York? Is that part of dreams, of fancy? And if that can take place, shall we stand by and say, 'Civilize if you can, but don't trouble us?'"

Professor Franklin H. Giddings of Columbia University, who spoke in opposition to the League of Nations, said that if any attempt was made to create a League of Nations with legislative and executive powers, the issue of sovereignty would have to be decided upon, and "if it is not decided to the general satisfaction, it will one day be decided by war."

Dr. Giddings declared that the strong powers would not merge their sovereignties, and, if they did not, the grave danger was that every crisis in international affairs would provoke a struggle for domination.

ACT TRAGEDY AND COMEDY.

"L'Enigme" and "Boubouroche" Presented by the French Company.

A double bill consisting of two two-act plays, one a tragic and the other a comic treatment of domestic infidelity, was presented splendidly by the French company of Director Jacques Copeau at the Theatre du Vieux Colombier last night. The plays will continue there for the rest of the week, and if presented as well as last night, there will not be a dull or lost moment in all the six evenings.

In "L'Enigme," the first of the plays, by Paul Hervé, the domestic triangle appears as a perplexing five-pointed star. Two husbands and their wives sojourning in a hunting lodge with two friends of the former, one of whom is revealed early as the secret lover of one of the wives. Which one? That is the enigma. He is caught in the gray dawn of the morning, by one of the husbands, while coming from the direction of the wives' rooms. Confronted by both husbands, he denies his guilt; and equally vehement and more convincing are the protestations of their innocence in turn by each of the wives. Whispers among the audience last n. testified to the consummate skill with which both actresses, Mmes. Valentine Tessier and Lucienne Bogaert, succeeded in baffling all guessers in the theatre, as well as the two husbands in their terrible earnestness of judges, as to with whom lay guilt and with whom innocence. It is only upon the dramatic suicide of the detected lover that confession springs from the tortured lips of one, and the enigma is solved. The further dénouement of this tense and electric play remains likewise enigma as to the husband's forgiveness or his executed wrath.

Director Jacques Copeau and Romain Bouquet as the husbands played with a silken strength and realism equal to that of the two wives. Henri Dhurtal, as the lover, and Charles Dullin, as the wise and gentle friend and conciliator of all parties throughout the play, were also well received.

The second play, "Boubouroche," by Georges Moinaux, (whose pen name was Georges Courteline,) was uproariously amusing from start to finish as it revolved, with genial, if often very broad, good humor, around the gauche but winning character of Boubouroche, the portly and red-faced and good-natured bon vivant, who has found his happiness for eight long and trusting years of amorous affinity with a lady friend whose gentleman friend has spent the salient part of those same eight years in just as snug and confident contentment, hidden in a wardrobe which she specially fitted up for his escape and tarrying on the occasions of Boubouroche's visits. When an over-conscientious kill-joy neighbor at last puts Boubouroche on the trail of his unhappiness, the good fellow has little difficulty in finding it in the snug and electrically lighted wardrobe. His unhappiness is genuinely affecting and a very eloquent argument to all who witness it against the cruel and bad morals of mistresses. The rapid and clever reasonings with which he is thereupon immediately led back by the lady of his heart to a faith firm as Gibraltar in her impeccable virtue and the inviolability of an "innocent family secret" which would explain what he has discovered in the wardrobe, were she not in honor bound to shield the secret of an unnamed other, keeps the audience in a continual roar that almost drowns the roar of the tale-bearing neighbor behind the scenes when Boubouroche, just man of honor that he is, goes next door to assert his recovered faith on the neighbor's bones.

Robert Casa, as Boubouroche, Jane Lory as the quick and shrewish mistress, Jean Sarment as the knight of the closet, and Charles Dullin as the neighbor who failed, all appeared to splendid advantage.

MOTION PICTURES.

We are Criticized!

—"Everybody" tells us we've made a big mistake in showing such a great big beautiful romance as "The Heart of Humanity" at regular prices.
—They claim this picture production should be dignified with much higher prices, not only because it is worth more but because people will appreciate it more if they have to pay more.
—If we're making a mistake we can't very well unmake it. Therefore New Yorkers will see "The Heart of Humanity" for less money than the folks of other cities, because we won't repeat the mistake of asking too little.
—We don't urge you to see
The "Heart of Humanity"
because of the low price; we only urge you to see it because we feel sure it is about the greatest love story, drama and romance that has found its way to the screen.
—If we're charging too little, please tell your friends about it, so they'll get too much for their money, too.

THE INTOLERABLE FEDERAL TAX SITUATION.

Internal Revenue Collector EDWARDS has challenged the statements made by some that it is good policy to take losses on securities for the sake of reducing Federal tax payments. The new tax bill has not yet gone into conference between the two houses, which are known to be in disagreement on points of such importance that they cannot be settled on the merits for a considerable time, and ought not to be settled in haste. In the Collector's words, published yesterday, "No firm "can guarantee to its clients any positive information about the law." That is so true that Collector EDWARDS's superior, Mr. ROPER, is worrying about the law more than any other person except the taxpayers and Mr. ROPER's superior, the Secretary of the Treasury. In fact, the only persons serene under the intolerable situation which has been created are the members of Congress. They are so either because they know less about the effect of their laws than those who must obey them, or else are indifferent to the consequences of giving effect to their intentions to misuse the taxing power for purposes other than raising revenue.

In this State the effect is perhaps worse than elsewhere. For example, our State Controller has not sent out bills for the tax on the income of corporations according to their returns under the Federal income tax law. The tax is due tomorrow, but unless it has been previously paid it is not deductible from income taxable under the Federal law for 1918. Accordingly some are advising the perplexed corporations that they write off their accrued charges according to their returns of 1917 and hold the cash until it is paid over to the Federal Collectors.

There are many computations of the increase of taxes contained in the pending bill, but nobody has made computations to show that the increase is dangerous, and perhaps unnecessary. The payments of 1918 for the business of 1917 were $3,694,703,000. The business of 1918 for which payment must be made in 1919 was greater and can be relied upon for a correspondingly greater tax yield. The increase of bank clearings was twenty-five billions, according to THE ANNALIST'S figures yesterday, and there is known to be a great volume of business which does not pass the Clearing Houses. The railways are running behind on their net earnings, but that condition is specific to them. The volume of business moving is reflected in the gross of the railways, and it increased over 8 per cent. The increase of business may be roughly taken at 10 to 20 per cent., corresponding to an expectation of increase of taxes by many hundreds of millions. Taking into consideration that the war expenses are being reduced by billions, the yield of taxes under the existing law, the law under which taxes were collected this year, might be expected to come within an endurable deficiency below the amount required. Why take more?

A DEMOCRATIC GOVERNOR.

Mr. ALFRED E. SMITH, who will become Governor of New York tomorrow, is a clean, energetic, clear-headed man. He knows the business of the State. With a Republican Legislature "on his hands," a Legislature, however, in which the Republicans, if united, have not the two-thirds majority necessary to overrule the Governor's veto, he may find it hard to carry out the cardinal policy of financial reform, in the methods both of appropriation and expenditure, that is the first necessity of our State Government. Slapdash credits arrived at without due co-operation, the Executive playing at cross-purposes with the great financial committees, expenses growing scandalously and intolerably—that is the kind of State Government we have had for years.

Immense pother and parade about an executive budget have begotten nothing but extravagance. Mr. SMITH properly dwelt much on that extravagance in his campaign speeches. It is to be hoped and presumed that, in power, he will be as averse to prodigality as he was when a candidate. He has the opportunity to make a courageous and steady effort for the reform which Governor WHITMAN did up in pretty words and tossed away.

The bad old plan of ca' me, ca' thee, Executive consents in consideration of confirmation of Executive appointments, lies in wait for the Governor. May he avoid it! There is the broad and easy road that leadeth to destruction.

It is likely enough that we shall never get responsible and efficient State government until we get back efficient and responsible party government. The repeal of the State primary law, so far, at least, as State and judicial offices are concerned, and the restoration of the official State Convention, should be the first work of the Legislature. Both parties want the change. Both should now join in making it.

OIL INTERESTS IN MEXICO.

Representative STEPHEN C. PORTER of Pennsylvania calls attention again to Article 27 of the new Mexican Constitution, which threatens to confiscate American property in oil lands in Mexico. Although LUIS CABRERA, ex-Minister of Finance, has argued, with some plausibility, that there was no intent on the part of his Government to do more than derive revenue by taxation from the oil wells, Article 27 does assert title to the oil and the decree of taxation issued last Winter sought to obtain from foreign owners an admission or recognition of that title. Article 27 declares that "in the "nation is vested direct ownership "* * * of petroleum and all hydro-"carbons, solid, liquid, or gaseous." The decree of Feb. 19, 1918, ordered that the oil product of land, as well as the land itself, be taxed. In his protest addressed to the Carranza Government, Ambassador FLETCHER said:

> It would appear that the decree in question is an effort to put into effect as to petroleum lands Paragraph 4 of Article 27 of the Constitution of May 1, 1917, by severing at one stroke the ownership of the petroleum deposits from the ownership of the surface, notwithstanding that the Constitution provides that "private property shall "not be expropriated except by rea-"son of public utility and by means "of indemnification."

Ambassador FLETCHER pointed out that no procedure to prevent spoliation of Americans owning oil lands had been provided, and, therefore, he said, the assertion in the new Constitution of title to all oil deposits was cause for uneasiness. It is obvious that confiscation could be effected by increasing taxes on the product to an intolerable degree; and there would always loom up the menace of radical legislation designed to appropriate oil lands without indemnification. The United States could not afford to overlook Article 27, or to disregard the sinister tax decree of Feb. 19.

The Mexican Government seeks to find warrant for its claim to oil deposits by citing the fact that in ancient mining orders of the Spanish Crown title to mineral lands was given by the King of Spain "without sepa-"rating them from my royal patri-"mony." The contention is that the Mexican nation by the treaty of Dec. 28, 1836, took the place of the Spanish Crown in sovereignty over the national patrimony, and that the Constitution of 1917 simply reasserted a right that wrongfully fell into abeyance through an interpretation of the Constitution of 1857, which, in Article 72, provided that "the Congress shall have power "* * * to promulgate mining and "commercial codes which shall be "binding throughout the whole re-"public." A law of Dec. 14, 1883, declaring that "the issue of laws is "obligatory for all the republic on "mining and commerce," is the statute which Minister ROUAIX of the Department of Agriculture, among others, points to as preparing the way to the sacrifice of Mexico's title to minerals inherited from the Spanish Crown, as in the following year (1884) legislation authorizing concessions was adopted.

The argument, of course, is the merest pettifogging. Between the wording of Article 72 of the Constitution of 1857 and that of the law of 1883 there is no difference in intent, and the revival of the reservation in the King's grant to interpret the Constitution is grotesque.

The Mexican Congress is now engaged in considering measures to carry out the directions or mandates of the new Constitution. Our State Department has protested what appears to be a design to confiscate the property of American citizens in the oil lands. No time should be lost in making the Mexican Government understand that titles obtained and granted in good faith must be respected, and that the enforcement of confiscatory legislation will not be endured.

EBERT'S LAST CHANCE.

Has EBERT, head man of the strange divided Government at Berlin, a backbone, or is he a mere papier mâché figure? We know him as a voice in the Reichstag and on the stump. Has he energy and will? He has been a good, easy man so far, and let the Bolsheviki mostly have their way. At last, he tells the Central Council of the Majority Socialists that they must back up him and his Majority Socialist associates in the Cabinet, or they will resign. Law and order must be maintained. Crime must be punished. There must be military force enough available to prevent another sailors' revolt or any other outbreak of disorder and anarchy.

If he had put down the sailors' revolt, shown no white feather, acted swiftly, strongly, overpoweringly, he would not have had to make this speech. If it is safe to carry on private war, safe to riot and murder, riot and private war will flourish. He should have begun repression earlier. There will be no disposition to blame him for past weakness, however, if he now shows the stuff of a man. The Central Council promises to take full responsibility for all measures to keep the peace, enforce law, and maintain order that the People's Commissioners may adopt. The Independent Socialists, the weaker brethren of the mixed Socialist Cabinet, go out. They don't approve the ravening Spartacides. At least they say so. The fact remains that, at a great danger point for German democracy, they will not stand with the friends of order; that by their withdrawal they give a tacit consent and encouragement to the fanatics and the criminals who seek by violence the immediate proletarian State, and who will do all they dare or are permitted to prevent the election of a Constituent Assembly, in which their little faction has no hope.

A new straight Majority Socialist Cabinet has been formed; a broader, a Coalition Government, in which the bourgeois democratic parties had a share, would have been better, and the shifty SCHEIDEMANN as Foreign Minister inspires no confidence abroad. Whatever Governments are made or unmade, they must compel obedience. In the contagion of Bolshevism, in the relaxation of military discipline, in the sporadic anarchies, half-doctrinaire, or wholly bandit, as the pillagers of Frankfort yesterday, punitive restraints have been forgotten during an interval of unsteady provisional government. They must be enforced sternly. The powers of mischief are careless with machine guns. The powers of order must have more, use them relentlessly, show the rebels that they mean business.

WORDS IN THE WAR.

In President WILSON's speech at Carlisle he said that "it is moral force as "much as physical force that has de-"feated the effort to subdue the "world. Words have cut as deep as "swords." Not only is this true, but the words have been wielded as vigorously on one side as the other. Mr. WILSON's hearers may instantly have thought of his own rôle in the war, and perhaps some of them may have suspected that he was thinking of it, too. But there were other words than his that cut deep. The German propaganda was so skillful with words that it did the work of armies. They were lying words, and the words with which the spokesmen of the Allies confronted them had to be words of truth. The lying words did immense damage; they destroyed Russia, for instance, which could hardly have been done by swords. Not swords, but words, lying words, defeated the Italian Army at Caporetto and drove it far back over the mountains and into the plains of its own country. The army was reinforced by brave swords, but it had to be strengthened by true words, too, before the danger of another Caporetto could pass away.

Without doubt Mr. WILSON is the man whose words were most effective. They brought despair to Germany and Austria-Hungary. But CLEMENCEAU stands hardly second to him in this respect. The freezing audacity with which he charged upon the enemy painted on the German mind—since no matter how audacious he was the defeatists could never budge, frighten, or check him—the picture of an undefeatable France and the picture of a lost Lorraine. LLOYD GEORGE's words were swords, over and over again. And back of these three great figures there was an innumerable host of lesser men, using the weapons of truth not less effectively than the soldiers used the weapons of war. As for the great artillery of words which the German propaganda so effectively and in part successfully employed, the Kaiser commanded it and fired many a volley himself, but the most of it was used by men whose names are largely unknown. Americans remember DERNBURG chiefly, but there were Dernburgs in every country.

RESULTS OF FEDERAL OPERATION.

Great works may be accomplished without conscious intent. Mr. MCADOO says: "I am not now and I have not "been for the last year interested in "proving or disproving the theory of "Government ownership or any other "theory." We think he has proved to the satisfaction of the American people and to the conviction of most persons who have attentively considered the matter that Federal operation of railroads has put upon the public a burden of much greater cost for much diminished accommodation. Everybody knows that train service has been reduced materially. All over the country important towns within commuting distance of large cities complain loudly of inadequate accommodation. Some have no trains on Sunday. Men have been seriously inconvenienced by enforced changes in their hours of going to and from business. On what are called limited trains, where an extra fare was paid for additional comforts or luxuries, charges have been increased and privation and inconvenience have taken the place of luxury. The bringing in of trains on time seems to be a forgotten art. The Western farmer, a very important person from the point of view of politicians, protests that under Government operation nobody seems to be very much interested in enabling him to get his products to market.

Federal operation continues to pile up deficits, although they are smaller than they were before the marked increase in rates went into effect. In October gross earnings increased $106,787,000, as compared with the corresponding month a year ago under private management, but net earnings decreased $16,257,000; that is, gross earnings were 28 per cent. better, net earnings 15 per cent. worse. The deficit for the ten months ending with October amounted to $192,000,000. This reflects the increase in freight and passenger rates, for the deficit at the end of June was $329,000,000. But for the month of October 78.39 per cent. of gross earnings was absorbed by operating expenses, against 67.9 per cent. under private management for the same month last year. That is an appalling percentage of operating cost, but under Government management it is difficult to see how it can be reduced; the tendency is toward increase. Imperative demands for higher wages cannot be safely disregarded by politicians.

Mr. MCADOO insists that the extension of the period of Government operation to five years is imperatively necessary since the "comprehensive improvements" he has in view could not possibly be carried out in two years. Some terminal improvements, he says, must be made "without re-"gard to the interest of the particular "carrier." If that policy is to be pursued, five years will be too short a time; fifty years would not remove the difficulties arising out of Federal operation, and at the end of fifty years a proposal to increase the period to 500 years, in fact, to make it perpetual, would hardly be regarded as illogical. The extension of Federal control to cover a period of five years after the end of the war points straight to Government ownership, and nowhere else.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Two Methods Have Been Tried.

In due time there may be revealed to the more or less keenly interested American public just what were the intentions and expectations of General PERSHING when he entered upon the performance of his task as ruler of Coblenz and the neighboring territory, and just what it was that has now moved him to make so much tighter and sterner the regulation of the people living there.

In the beginning, obviously, he determined to try the effect of assuming that the Germans would appreciate kindness—and would not abuse privileges; that they would be grateful if he played the conqueror as little as possible, gave them as few reminders as the situation permitted of their vanquished state, and interfered almost not at all with their accustomed habits of life. The experiment was amiably conceived, but there was warning as to how it would probably work out in the fact that the French, the British, and the Belgians—all of whom know Germans pretty well—adopted in the conduct of their respective occupations a policy that in comparison seemed harsh.

The Germans themselves, according to many reports, noted the difference—those at Coblenz joyfully and those in the other sectors with sincere though cautiously expressed regret. The one group admitted that they were in great good luck in having Americans to deal with, while the others found no consolation at all in reminders that their own rule in Belgium and Eastern France had been vastly more severe than anything they themselves had to suffer from the victors. Nowhere was there any reprisal in kind, except to the extent that the subject population had imposed on it firm restrictions, the general effect of which was to reveal clearly but not cruelly the fact that Germany lost the war. Of course there were protests and pleadings for greater leniency, but there was also submission.

A Sudden Change of Policy.

So far as anybody on this side of the water has heard, the Germans have made no trouble in any of the four sectors. There must be a lot of significance, however, in the fact that the American commander has now formulated rules for observance by the Germans in his territory that are practically the same as those enforced from the start in the other three regions. Communication with the rest of Germany has been cut off almost entirely, and what little remains is under a rigid censorship. The local press, too, has been warned of what it can and cannot publish, every house must bear what policemen call the "pedigree" of all its occupants, and the hours for being indoors and outdoors are settled for them in a way that must be irksome after the next to complete freedom to do what they pleased which had been granted to them.

This change has not been explained, but it doubtless has an explanation, and a fairly safe guess is that the cause of the change was the discovery that the people of Coblenz needed continuously to be reminded of what has happened to them. There is no probability that if they had not mistaken kindness for weakness their privileges would have been withdrawn.

Truthfulness Really Astonishing.

Even in days like these, when so much of public attention has to be divided between statesmen and soldiers, there will be some left over for THOMAS WATSON, house painter, of Carlisle, England. A truly remarkable man is THOMAS WATSON, and most remarkable in a way that was not realized by his fellow-townsmen when from among Carlisle's Oldest Inhabitants they drew him out of his modest home to meet President WILSON and to be introduced as the one survivor of the pupils who attended the school kept by the President's grandfather.

On the day of the Presidential visit that was for THOMAS WATSON a sufficient claim to emergence from honorable obscurity; but what must have been the amazement, both of President WILSON and the good people of Carlisle, when THOMAS WATSON, replying to an inquiry for reminiscences of the long-departed clergyman and schoolmaster, admitted that he hadn't any to give! "I'm afraid not," he said. "I was a rather small fellow then."

This answer violated immemorial precedent. Never once in any age or clime has such an admission been made by an Oldest Inhabitant before. It was not quite kind, perhaps, in THOMAS WATSON thus to disappoint legitimate expectations when the satisfaction of them would have been so easy, but how wonderfully honest it was! Of all Oldest Inhabitants he certainly is the most truthful.

It is hard to tell whether his devotion to veracity was in this instance the cause of gain or of loss to him. Directly and immediately, of course, it was loss, for his confession diminished interest in him, but the ultimate effect will be, or ought to be, his deathless fame as the one Oldest Inhabitant who couldn't, or rather who didn't, assist a failing memory by the exercise of a still active imagination.

Adequate Excuse Is Lacking.

Such explanations as have been given of the Government's failure to pay promptly the money due to soldiers and their dependents are in effect nothing except admissions on the part of the War Department's disbursing officials that they were incapable of meeting the difficulties created for them by a great war. They would hardly claim that these difficulties were insuperable by the exercise of human ingenuity. To do that would be humiliating as well as more than dubiously true.

The cause of the failure seems to have been inappreciation somewhere in the department of the seriousness of the situation that would be created by leaving so many of these men penniless for months. It has resulted in planting over a good part of the country a justified form of discontent, and it constitutes a scandal equaling, if not surpassing, that due to the wretched mail service provided for the soldiers and their friends ever since the United States went into the war.

The Resting Place of Americans.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Now that the boys are coming back, the question of the final burial or resting place of our soldier dead will become a more and more insistent one with the American people.

Doubtless individual families will wish to bring home their own beloved dead to sleep their last sleep on American soil.

There may be a desire on the part of the people all over the country, and even a willingness on the part of the Government, to bring back the bodies of those fallen on the field of honor. But is it feasible where there are so many who have been buried in so many sectors, where so many are unidentified, and large numbers destroyed almost utterly and certainly beyond recognition?

But even a larger and more important question is, Is it desirable?

What would be the effect upon the minds, hearts, and spirits of the American people? What a tremendous play upon the emotions of the whole people it would awaken.

Forgotten not one will ever be.

National and municipal monuments and memorials will be erected. But Time, the great healer, will gradually soften the sorrow of loss, and by the time the whole holocaust would be brought home it will have done so more and more.

Is it wise to open all the wounds to bleed afresh and in a measure renew the first agony of suffering?

Some universal, national day of special mourning and memorial could be appointed in the near future, with church rites of all faiths, if you will, but let the dead rest where they have so gloriously fallen.

The country could easily become possessed in perpetuity of ground in France and Flanders or other lands where our heroes lie and lay out American military cemeteries, like Arlington, and gather its great dead to sleep its last sleep under the everlasting protection of the flag whose honor they laid down their lives to save and glorify.

ANNETTE KOHN.

The Treaty of London.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In any discussion of the Adriatic question I fail to see what the Treaty of London, upon which the Italians base so much hope, has got to do with it. Our contract with the Central Powers calls for the carrying out of certain definite promises in connection with which there can be no compromise. In the settlement of the Adriatic question, according to the principles embodied in said promises, nationality is to be the test. Why cloud the issue then? Any authoritative map (such as Shepherd's Historical Atlas, p. 168) on the distribution of races in Austria-Hungary, as constituted before the war, and in the Balkans, holds very little hope for Italy in her claims, exclusive of the Trentino, Gorizia, Trieste, and Pola. That the Treaty of London guarantees more is a matter to be settled between Italy and the Entente as then constituted. That is a matter entirely apart from the question to be decided at the Peace Conference, where it is safe to say the imperialistic designs of Italy in Dalmatia will reap their just reward.

The Worst of the Army Mail Service

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In answer to the letter praising the mail service of the army, I quote what my boy has said. Extract quoted verbatim from letter received from France. Please note date:

> France, Nov. 19, 1918.
> Dear —— I received your long, nice letter of June 18 today. Just think, written five months ago, "some time" I claim. A conundrum: If the American Expeditionary Force had been handled with the same expedition that my letters are, how long would it have taken us to have defeated the Huns?

CONSTANT READER.

"THE GREAT LOVER": A FAREWELL.

And down a stormy sky of gold,
In clouded glory sinks the sun
That to rebirth goes as of old.
Farewell, Great Lover! Till the night

As Phoenix builds his funeral pyre
And from its ashes soars anew,
So, in thy passionate desire
For life, reborn thou shalt be too.
O, Bird of God, how fierce the flame
That needs must burn away the shame!

As comes the one sun back to earth,
And as the same bird soars again,
Still journey on the souls of men.
It is for life that lovers strive,
And love shall keep the soul alive.

Grieve not that thou must greet thy new
Bright scion on its way so soon;
Behold, in that prophetic view
Thou hast been granted thy rich boon;
The King is dead—long live the King!

INTERNED ALIENS FACE DEPORTATION

Department of Justice Will Ask Congress to Bar Most of Them.

MORE THAN 3,000 NOW HELD

Titled Men and Wealthy Germans Will Be Subject to Proposed Exclusion Law.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—Deportation of most of the 3,000 or 4,000 enemy aliens now interned in the United States will be recommended to Congress soon by the Department of Justice.

Special legislation will be required for the deportations and it was learned today that the department would ask also for authority to prevent the re-entry of these men into this country later. Some of the interned aliens are not considered dangerous now and no effort will be made to deport them. Careful investigation of the records, however, convinces Department of Justice officials that the larger proportion of those interned should not be left in this country to foment future trouble.

The department never has announced how many enemy aliens are held in internment camps in this country, but the number is understood to be between 3,000 and 4,000. Most of them are Germans and a few are women.

About half are understood to be men who served actively at one time as German agents in the United States, receiving and executing orders directly from the German Government or its representatives. These include trained propagandists, men involved in bomb plots early in the war and during America's neutrality, and some who plotted directly against American shipping and the transportation of troops overseas.

There are also many men who were suspected of gathering information for transmission to Germany after the United States entered the war, but against whom specific proof could not be obtained.

Many of the prisoners are men with families in the United States, who have lived here for a number of years, and not a few are men of large wealth.

Many Prominent Germans Held.

Of the enemy aliens to be affected by the passage of the proposed deportation law, New York City will furnish more than any other city in the country. It is estimated that more than 500 Germans and Austro-Hungarian subjects who have made New York their home have been interned since April 6, 1917, and this number includes some of the most prominent Germans, Austrians, and Hungarians in the country. Among them are bank presidents, private bankers, exporters and importers, college professors, merchants, musicians, actors, and former officers of the German army, navy, and merchant marine.

Among the former prominent German residents of this city who will face deportation under the new law are Baron Gustav von Hasberg, who was a son-in-law of the late Commodore McVickar, one of the founders of the New York Yacht Club, and James Minotto, the son-in-law of Louis Swift, the Chicago packer.

Hugo Schmidt, former agent of the Deutsche Bank in New York, who was one of Bernstorff's financial advisers and the paymaster of the Bolo Pacha-Bernstorff plot to debauch public opinion in France, is expected to be among the first of the enemy aliens to be considered for deportation. In the same camp with Schmidt is Adolph Pavenstedt, former head of the banking house of G. Amsinck & Co., the go-between in the Bolo-Bernstorff conspiracy.

Carl Heynen, German Consul General in Mexico, who was prominent in German activities in New York during the first two years of the war, is another alien who faces deportation, as is also Baron Maurice von Seebeck, a son of the German General whose command was the first to violate the neutrality of Belgium.

Captain Hans Ruser, who was the commander of the Vaterland, now the U. S. S. Leviathan, is another interned alien, and with him are the Captains and chief officers of practically all the German ships that were in American waters when Congress declared war.

There are also several women who will be liable to deportation under the proposed law. Among them are Fräulein Erdmann, the biologist, and Fräulein Agathe W Rickrath, former instructor in German at Vassar College. Another woman who may be deported is Frau Sophie Schultz, a friend of Bernstorff. She was the first woman arrested in New York as a dangerous enemy alien.

PERSHING THANKS Y. W. C. A.

All Ranks of the Army in France Join in Season's Greetings.

The War Work Council of the Young Women's Christian Association announced yesterday that the following telegram had been sent by General John J. Pershing to the Paris headquarters of the Young Women's Christian Association:

"I wish to express with deep feeling my gratitude for the generous contribution which the Young Women's Christian Association has made to the moral and physical welfare of this expedition. All ranks join me in sending the season's greetings to the Young Women's Christian Association workers with the American Expeditionary Forces."

General Pershing refers particularly to workers who had charge of Hostess Houses for American women war workers and to those in charge of Hostess Houses for American Signal Corps girls and English Waacs (Women's Auxiliary Army Corps) working with the American Army.

The Jewish Welfare Board made public yesterday this cable message from General Pershing:

"With a profound feeling of gratitude for the great share that the Jewish Welfare Board has contributed to the morale and physical welfare of my expedition, I join with all the ranks in sending my sincerest, holiday greetings, and best wishes for the New Year."

WARNS AGAINST GERMANS.

BOSTON, Dec. 30.—Germany's wartime plans for after-the-war commercial supremacy were described by A. Mitchell Palmer, Alien Property Custodian, today at a luncheon of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, with a warning that danger from German ambitions is not past and cannot be ignored.

Mr. Palmer told of what has been accomplished by the United States in weeding out Germany's hold on America's commercial interests gained for the purpose of furthering this plan and declared for a "decree of absolute divorce between German capital and American industry."

Before this country's entrance into the war, he said, most of the great German-owned industrial establishments were spy centres "filled with agents of Germany, long plotting against the safety of the United States."

"They were a part of the great German plan for the military and commercial domination of the world," he continued. "I hope to be able to say when peace is finally declared that there is no longer any influential German interests in this country; that every particle of German ownership in our important industries has been wiped out, and that American industries have been restored to their rightful owners."

CHALLENGES LABOR BOARD.

Third Avenue Line Says It Cannot Raise Wages Without Fares.

The National War Labor Board began yesterday in the Aldermanic Chamber of the City Hall an inquiry into hours and conditions of labor on the Third Avenue Railway Company's lines, in spite of the refusal of the company to recognize any authority of the board to investigate. A number of employes testified yesterday that they had been discharged for joining a union of employes. Some said they had been discharged after the company discovered that they attended a secret meeting of employes held for the purpose of organizing for a strike.

On behalf of the employes, application was made to the board for a recommendation that employes discharged during the present year for belonging to a union should be reinstated and paid for the interval during which they were without employment.

The board was also asked to rule that the company, which has employed women largely in recent months, should take back into its employ all men employes who wish to go back into the service. Higher wages and shorter hours were also asked for.

The company was not represented by counsel at the hearing, but a memorandum was submitted on its behalf, denying the authority of the War Labor Board, as follows:

> Neither the Federal Government nor any Federal agency has power or authority to regulate, interfere with, or in any way control the operation of a street surface railway located wholly within a State. The decisions of your board relative to labor employed by such a street surface railway must necessarily affect the operating expenses of such railway, and yet the power to increase or regulate the rates of fare of such railway is vested only in the State.
> Any Federal legislation, act, or proclamation purporting to give to your board power to pass upon, or control in any way, matters relative to labor employed by a street surface railway, or otherwise to regulate the expenditure and operation of a street surface railway, is confiscatory and unconstitutional, in that neither the Federal Government nor any Federal agency has the power to afford to such street railway corporation any necessary increase in rates or revenues to enable it to carry out any decision of the War Labor Board requiring, or which may result in, additional or increased expenditures by such street surface railway.

The authority of the board was challenged on the ground that its commission from the President was for the investigation of a special class of war industries only, and on the ground that its powers were extinguished by the termination of the war.

Following the example of Charles Evans Hughes in the cable suit, the company's memorandum quotes the words of President Wilson, "The war thus comes to an end," as a testimony that the emergency for which the National War Labor Board was created is past.

REED MEETS BANKERS.

Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, following his attack on President Wilson's plan for a League of Nations, delivered on Sunday night at the dinner of the Society of Arts and Sciences, attended a luncheon yesterday at noon at the Bankers' Club, and, as it was expressed, "held a round table" with some of the national leaders of banking and business.

Although it had been reported that the luncheon was arranged by "fourteen business men and bankers," it developed last night that this was incorrect. The luncheon was conceived and arranged by Frank Plachy, Jr., a member of the staff of The New York Commercial. Mr. Plachy, about five years ago, published The Searchlight in Minneapolis, Minn., a publication alleged to have had Socialistic tendencies, but Mr. Plachy denied last night that The Searchlight was Socialistic. He said it was the Democratic organ of Minnesota.

According to a list given out at the Waldorf, the following attended the luncheon; Thomas W. Lamont of J. P. Morgan & Co.; Seward Prosser, President of the Bankers Trust Company; Charles H. Sabin, President of the Guaranty Trust Company; Francis H. Sisson, Vice President of the Guaranty Trust Company; Charles McD. Puckette, managing editor of The New York Evening Post; W. T. Graham; E. R. Kenzel of the New York Federal Reserve Bank; Charles E. Mitchell of the National City Company; H. K. McCann, President of H. K. McCann Company; Frank Trumbull, President of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company; George Edmund Smith, President of the American Manufacturers' Export Association; Charles C. Daniels; Russell R. Whitman, publisher of The New York Commercial, and Frank Plachy, Jr. According to one of the diners, however, Mr. Lamont and Mr. Prosser and several others did not attend.

Admitting that it was he who had given the luncheon, Mr. Plachy last night talked about it as follows:

"About two weeks ago I was in Washington and while there I met Senator Reed. The Senator at that time was attending the hearings about Hearst, you know. It occurred to me to arrange a meeting between the Senator and some of the friends I have down town. I returned and went around and invited some of them, and we held the luncheon. There was no political significance to it.

"At the luncheon we talked over the League of Nations," continued Mr. Plachy. "Senator Reed is opposed to it. We also talked over the railroads, the merchant marine, and trade, especially export trade. The exporters are looking for legislation which will help American exports. Senator Reed, who has an open mind, merely wanted to exchange views on these questions. Yes, it was a sort of round table, no set speeches, merely an expression of opinions."

Mr. Plachy was asked about the Searchlight. He replied that it had not been Socialistic in any sense and explained how he came to be connected with it. He said he was in the banking business out in Minneapolis and that the Democratic Party was badly off for an organ out there, because the State was Republican. He said The Searchlight finally was bought and published to fill that need.

FORD SEEKS A RECOUNT.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Dec. 30.—A petition to restrain city clerks from destroying ballots cast in the Senatorial election in Michigan last November has been filed in the Federal Court here in behalf of Henry Ford, who, according to the official canvass of the vote, was defeated for the election by Commander Truman H. Newberry, Republican.

The petition is filed, it was stated, because Mr. Ford intends to ask the Senate to order a recount of the votes.

It is understood similar action will be started shortly in the eastern district of the State.

An investigation into the Senatorial election in western Michigan has been under way for some time, being conducted by United States District Attorney Myron H. Walker. What the investigation has developed has not been divulged.

On the face of official returns announced Nov. 26 by the State Canvassing Board, Newberry defeated Henry Ford, who made the race on the Democratic ticket, by a margin of 7,567.

SENATORS ATTACK BURLESON ANEW

FALSIFICATION IS CHARGED

Burleson Immediately Denies Watson's Statement as to Order—His Earlier Letter of Defense.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—Criticism of Postmaster General Burleson for taking over the marine cables after the signing of the armistice was renewed today in the Senate. Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska, Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, precipitated the discussion, after presenting a letter from Mr. Burleson, in which the Postmaster General denied that he had exceeded his authority and asserted that the order taking over the cables had been signed by the President Nov. 2.

Senator Hitchcock said the Postmaster General had come very "close to breaking faith with Congress" and was not justified in taking over the cables after hostilities had ceased. He accused Mr. Burleson of suppressing the order for some time.

Senator Watson, Republican, of Indiana, charged that the date of the order originally was Nov. 14, but that, because of the signing of the armistice sooner than expected, it was changed to Nov. 2.

"When the order was made," said Senator Watson, "the date was first put down as Nov. 14, the armistice having been signed on the 11th of that month. Afterward the date was erased and Nov. 2 was inserted. I have every reason to believe that that fact is susceptible of proof. The object of it is apparent without comment."

Senator Kellogg, Republican, of Minnesota, said he had been informed the order was signed by the President on Nov. 2, but it was not countersigned by the Secretary of State, and it was "never published or exhibited to any one until after the war had closed and the armistice been signed."

"Even the date when it was exhibited to one of the telegraph companies was blank, and the order was never made before the signing of the armistice," Senator Kellogg declared. He said Mr. Burleson had "violated the good faith of Congress."

Prompt Denial by Burleson.

While the Senate debate was in progress, the Post Office Department issued this statement:

"The attention of the Postmaster General having been directed to the statement of Senator Watson of Indiana that the proclamation of the President taking over the cables was falsified in order that it might appear that the cables were taken over before the armistice was signed, he made the following statement:

"'Senator Watson has evidently been imposed upon. I was present on the second day of November when the President signed the proclamation taking over the cables. I saw him attach his signature thereto and in his own handwriting insert with pen and ink the line date Nov. 2, 1918.'"

Senator Shafroth, Democrat, of Colorado, defending the taking over of the cables, said in the course of the debate that the war was not yet over, and that doubtless the Administration believed the cables would be valuable in connection with the Peace Conference.

Senator Swanson of Virginia joined in the discussion to say that a cause of delay in mail delivery to men overseas was due to the failure of the War Department to give the addresses of units to the Post Office Department.

"And those poor devils lying on cots in hospitals did not get mail for months at a time," interposed Senator Hitchcock.

Senator New, Republican, of Indiana, said that although the fighting units of the army frequently were shifted, the base hospital units had a definite location, and the officers and men connected with those units also were without mail for long periods.

Burleson's Letter to Hitchcock.

In his letter to Senator Hitchcock Mr. Burleson said:

"Of course, my dear Senator, no one knows better than you that a public official is not called upon to notice the mouthings of irresponsible blatherskites who may criticise or misrepresent his official actions, but when a critical statement is made by a Senator of the United States it not only justifies but calls for response.

"Of course, it is not true that I have of my own will ruthlessly seized and taken possession of these cables; of course, it is not true that I have taken possession of them just to gratify my personal convictions, personal opinion, and personal wishes; of course, it is not true that I have reached out to control business activities the Congress did not intend to put into my hands. I feel that a reply to all such charges can be conclusively made by quotations from a motion to dismiss filed by the representative of the law department of our Government, made by direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to a silly suit recently instituted (for publicity purposes) in a court known to be without jurisdiction against the Postmaster General, in which these unfounded charges are set forth."

The Postmaster General explained that the order providing for taking over the cables was based on a ruling of the Attorney General that such action was legal.

Mr. Burleson in his letter also branded as "utterly without foundation" charges that much of the mail addressed to soldiers overseas fails to reach its destination. The department, he said, had delivered to the various military units in France nearly 70,000,000 pieces of mail each month, which had been done on an average of "better than thirty days' time from the average date of postmarking to the delivery of mail abroad."

A BILLION IN DIAMONDS HERE

America Now Owns Fully Half of the World's Supply.

The value of the diamonds owned in the United States at the present time is apparently more than $1,000,000,000. As early as 1900 a diamond expert said that in that year gems worth $500,000,000 were held in this country. A compilation made public yesterday by the National City Bank shows that the value of diamonds imported since 1900 is $506,000,000.

"This alone would bring the total value of the diamonds of the country above the billion-dollar line," the bank's statement said, "but when it is remembered that $175,000,000 worth of the diamonds imported since 1900 came in the carat state, and that their value was doubled by the cutting process, which occurred within this country, it is apparent that the value of the stock in the United States is considerably more than $1,000,000,000, to say nothing of the further fact that prices of diamonds have increased materially during the war.

"About one-half of the world's diamonds are now apparently owned in the United States. An estimate made in 1900 by the authority above referred to put the value of the world's stock of diamonds at rather more than $1,000,000,000, and indicated that the United States then owned about one-third of the total known stock. With the rapid additions to our own stock through importation of $506,000,000 worth since 1900, it seems probable that fully one-half of the world's stock of diamonds is now held in the United States."

DISCUSS MANNING PLAN FOR FREE PEWS

RECTOR SEES "A NEW DAY."

Advocates the Change in Church Custom in Interest of the Spirit of Democracy.

Diverse opinions were expressed yesterday by clergymen and laymen with regard to the suggestion made on Sunday by Dr. William T. Manning in his sermon in Trinity Church, that the practice of renting pews, which had existed since the founding of the church in 1697, should be abolished, so that all places in the church would be free. Dr. Percy Stickney Grant of the Church of the Ascension was heartily in favor of it, while Dr. George Alexander of the First Presbyterian Church pointed out practical difficulties in the way of its consummation. Mgr. M. J. Lavelle, Vicar General of the Archdiocese of New York, said that he did not care to discuss the matter at the present time.

Among the laymen who were questioned, most of whom are members of the vestry of Trinity, the preponderance of opinion seemed to be for the adoption of the free church idea.

When asked yesterday to speak further upon his proposal Dr. Manning said that he thought such a policy would have far reaching effects.

"There is a good deal of sentiment for it even among those who now rent pews," he said. "In fact, a large majority of the churches already have free seats. As far as Trinity is concerned, I have not yet discussed the matter with the vestry, but I have made the suggestion, so that they may consider it. Some of the men I know are in favor of it, but there are likely to be divergent views.

In Line "With the New Day."

"Whatever we felt before the war, the change is certainly now in line with the new day. Although there may be a spirit of hospitality in churches where pews are rented, certainly such a system of renting is an obstacle to the full fellowship of Christianity. The men who are coming back to us will find it easier to understand the spirit of democracy that should be existent here if the churches are open to all comers and they are not under obligations to pewholders for seats. The free seats should be a thank offering for the victory they have won, for the blessings of the church should be thrown open to every one."

Dr. George Alexander, who has just been selected for the pastoral duties of the First Presbyterian Church, formed by the amalgamation of the congregations of the Old First, Madison Square, and University Place Churches, said yesterday that the congregation of his church was not yet prepared to say what the policy would ultimately be.

"When the three churches united," he continued, "they agreed to come to no definite conclusion at the present time, for it will be necessary for the new church to find itself. What my own personal opinion is I should rather not say now, except that I have myself worked under three different systems, including that of free pews, and I may say that any one of them is tolerable if administered in the Christian spirit and any one is intolerable if administered otherwise. The free church has serious drawbacks in some cases, but it depends upon the location and the clientele of the church."

In proof of the wholeheartedness with which he espouses the free church idea, Dr. Percy Stickney Grant cited his own experience. "When I was offered the pastorate of the Church of the Ascension, twenty-five years ago," he said, "I stipulated that my acceptance would be conditioned upon the making free of all the pews in the church. I did not accept until this was agreed upon, and they have been free ever since. There is an increasing number of free churches, but it may be that some cannot be carried on in that way. There are different types of people and they may need different kinds of organization. However, democracy is the spirit of the age, and looking at it from that point of view it is entirely likely that the free church will be with us more and more."

Although Dr. Manning has not yet broached the subject to the vestry of Trinity in an official way, several of the vestrymen were free to give their opinions when they were questioned yesterday. The majority seem to favor the idea, while others have not yet made up their minds. These opinions follow:

A. S. Murray, Jr.—"Personally I am in favor of free seats in the churches. To my own pew I always welcome strangers. I feel that the people generally are coming to the idea of making the pews free for all, as this is a time when democracy is in the ascendant. However, I am speaking only for myself, as I have not the faintest idea of the opinion of the vestry of Trinity."

Another vestryman, who did not wish to have his name used, said: "I am totally indifferent to the proposition. It does not make a particle of difference to me. If anybody wants to sit in my pew he is welcome to do so. The question has been much discussed in the churches and the change has been brought about with good effect in many of them. For myself, I am like the man who has no prejudice, but hates the Germans. In Trinity nothing will be accomplished without a vote of the vestry, and until that time perhaps I ought not to express an opinion."

Ogden Favors the Free Church.

David B. Ogden: "I have favored the so-called 'free church' for a long time. I think it is the coming thing. Although it has been discussed for some time, the war has brought the question to the front, and certainly Dr. Manning has taken a very opportune time to broach the subject. Of course, there are practical difficulties in the way, such as the fact that some pews are owned in fee; but if these difficulties can be removed, the new policy should be adopted in every church."

S. Edward Nash: "I have not yet formed an opinion upon the matter. I feel that it is a question that requires serious consideration."

Henry C. Swords: "I believe in the free church wherever it is a practicable proposition. By that I mean that there are many churches that are not endowed and depend upon large pew rentals for their support. In some cases the pews are owned outright. But as a general principle I feel that religion is as free as air. Therefore I think that in twenty years we shall have nothing but free churches."

George Zabriskie, of the Vestry of Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church, had the following to say: "In a general way the change would be an excellent thing for a church like Trinity, which is a sort of civic institution and is next to the oldest church in the city. As a general proposition I should favor it everywhere. In Calvary we have been working toward that end for several years, and eventually it will be accomplished. It is our policy, but it cannot be consummated immediately."

VICTORY WILL COLOR NEW YEAR PARTIES

JOY FOR MEN IN UNIFORM

Dances and Entertainments for Thousands — Trinity Chimes to Play Popular Airs.

The celebration of Victory New Year, as the 1919 holiday has come to be known, promises to be memorable, to judge from elaborate preparations making for tonight's and tomorrow's demonstrations of gladness. Whether in the churches, where throngs will go to offer thanks for the return of peace, or in the theatres, hotels and cabarets, where thousands will welcome the year, victory in arms will color the picture.

Interest centres naturally in plans for the entertainment of the boys in khaki and blue who will spend the year's natal day in the city. It is estimated that 25,000 sailors and more than twice as many soldiers will be Father Knickerbocker's guests. The War Camp Community Service, the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, and other organizations, as well as many individuals, have arranged programs meant to give the men in uniform a never to be forgotten holiday.

At Pershing Theatre, Forty-fourth Street and Madison Avenue, a vaudeville performance in which many Broadway stars will take part, will be given tonight for the men in uniform. Dances for the sailors, soldiers, and marines will be held this evening at ten places in the city, while vaudeville acts and motion pictures will be shown at many of the war service entertainment centres. Open house will be the word tonight and all day tomorrow at fifteen of the larger clubs conducted by the War Camps Community Service.

The great event of New Year's Day for the men in uniform will be the Khaki and Blue Dance at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory, where 3,000 partners will be ready to dance with the boys. Similar dances will be given in many other places. All day tomorrow 100 residents of Gramercy Park will extend hospitality to the soldiers, sailors, and marines. The idea was conceived by Mrs. James Madison Bass, head of Pershing House in Gramercy Park, who found the residents of that section gladly willing to be the hosts. Ten Fifth Avenue buses will be used to carry convalescent soldiers to places of amusement.

To look after the welfare of the thousands of men in uniform who will be in the city, the military provost guard and naval guard will be increased tonight and tomorrow. Major P. L. Marshall, Provost Marshal of New York, will have 600 military policemen out, and the naval authorities will double their present patrolling force. In response to a suggestion from the military and naval authorities the New York Liquor Dealers' Association has ordered its members to close their saloons at 6 P. M. tomorrow.

The time-honored "watch night" service will be observed in scores of churches tonight. Special programs of music have been arranged and invitations extended to the soldiers and sailors to attend. The chimes of Trinity in lower Broadway will ring again, and in keeping with the times patriotic and popular tunes will be played so that the thousands who gather in the neighborhood may sing such favorites as "Keep the Home Fires Burning," "There's a Long, Long Trail," "Lead, Kindly Light," and "Auld Lang Syne." A special service with a full choir will be conducted inside the church beginning at 11:30, and the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning will speak.

At the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, St. Patrick's Cathedral, and St. George's Church special New Year's Eve services will be held. A "watch night" service for soldiers and sailors will be held at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Club, 225 West Ninety-ninth Street.

Despite the threatened walk-out of waiters and cooks at the hotels and restaurants tonight, preparations are going on for the reception of the thousands who have taken tables for the evening. The hotel and restaurant proprietors professed not to be worried about the strike, declaring they were more concerned as to whether Mayor Hylan would grant all-night licenses. No announcement was forthcoming from the City Hall yesterday regarding the Mayor's intentions.

Under the auspices of a committee of men and women prominent in the social and professional world a costume ball of the four arts will be given tonight at the Hotel des Artistes, 1 West Sixty-seventh Street. The glory of old Versailles and the Villa Trianon will be depicted in a series of tableaux. The costumes for the tableaux were designed by Howard Chandler Christy. Penrhyn Stanlaws, Albert Sterner, Arnold Genthe, Neysa McMein, and Baron de Meyer. More than 1,600 tickets have been sold for the event.

GRIFFITH PLANNING DEAL WITH BOSTON

DENIES JOHNSON STORY

Washington Leader Surprised at Attitude Ty Cobb Has Assumed Toward Detroit Club.

Manager Clarke Griffith of Washington is in town, playing the rôle of David Harum, and is dickering with President Harry H. Frazee, of the Boston Red Sox for a big trade. The news was rampant last night that Frazee was trying to get the great Walter Johnson for the Boston Club, but Griffith lost no time in squelching this rumor. Griff would think of selling the Washington franchise some time, perhaps, but never would he consider a proposition to part with Johnson.

It seems that Griffith is anxious to get a second baseman and would like to land Jack Barry. As Boston's outfield is now somewhat uncertain, after parting with Duffy Lewis, the Red Sox management is anxious to get an outfielder, and a deal may be made whereby Boston will get Shanks or Milan for Barry.

Griffith said he was surprised at the attitude Ty Cobb has taken toward the Detroit Club. He said that the Georgia peach had been liberally treated by the Tiger management and should show a little more gratitude.

President Navin made a statement in Detroit last night in regard to Cobb, and made it plain that if the Georgia gem plays baseball anywhere next season it will be in Detroit.

August Herrmann announced in Cincinnati last night that he had completed plans for the readjustment and refinancing of the Cincinnati Club and would be President of the organization next season. This is taken by baseball men as an indication that Herrmann is ready to step out of the Chairmanship of the National Commission and make way for a neutral official.

President John Heydler of the National League will leave today for French Lick Springs to meet Ban Johnson, head of the American League. These two, with Barney Dreyfuss of Pittsburgh, will make up the schedules for the coming season.

The plan is to make a schedule of 140 games, but this may meet some opposition when it comes up for approval at the joint meeting of the leagues here on Jan. 16. It now develops that many of the club owners in both leagues are anxious to start next Spring on the old 154-game schedule.

Heydler and Johnson will talk over the National Commission situation at French Lick and will go from there to Cincinnati, where the Chairman will be elected on Jan. 6.

Manager John J. McGraw of the Giants yesterday received a letter from Chaplain Henry D. Wacker, U. S. A., who officiated at the funeral services of Captain Eddie Grant when the former player of the Giants lost his life in the Argonne Forest. The letter follows:

"This letter comes to you from one who is a total stranger to you. The reason I am writing it is because I am sure you would like to know about the death of one who was associated with you as a member of the Giants, namely, Captain Eddie Grant, 304th Infantry. It was my sad duty to bury the remains near the spot where he paid the supreme sacrifice for the great cause for which he came over here to France.

"He lost his life in leading an attack against the boches, who had surrounded several companies of the 308th Infantry trying to break through an impassable barrier of machine gun and artillery fire. Although tired and worn out by a campaign of heavy fighting, he nevertheless gladly accepted the command to accomplish what several others had failed to do. As he led his command to attack, he fell the victim of machine gun fire, heroically giving his life that his comrades in arms in the 154th Brigade might be rescued. After a short while we were able to approach the spot where he fell and secure his body. We buried him in a place where several of his fellow officers lie buried, which had been prepared by the Germans in the Argonne Forest in a small cemetery for their dead.

"Captain Grant was the most popular man in the 304th Infantry, well beloved by his men, who would follow him wherever he led the way. He had no fear of death, going where duty and honor called him. Now he lies near the spot where he poured out his life's blood that liberty and justice may prevail.

"This letter comes to you from one who has been an admirer of the New York Giants in their several fights for the pennant. I wish you a successful season and hope that we can have baseball on the same plane as before the war."

WHEAT LEADING BATSMAN.

Zach Wheat, the accomplished Brooklyn left fielder, swung his bat so skillfully last season that it has landed him at the top of the official averages in the National League. Wheat smashed the ball at a .335 clip, playing in 105 games. Southworth, the promising Pittsburgh player, has an average of .341, but he played in only 64 games, so the Brooklyn mawler is the real leader of the circuit. The best batsman on the Giants last season was Benny Kauff, who finished with an average of .315. Ross Young was also in the exclusive set with a mark of .302.

Wheat took part in the most sensational hitting streak of the season, when between July 11 and Aug. 8 he batted safely 26 consecutive games for an average of .444. The leading run-getter of the league was Heinie Groh of Cincinnati, who crossed the platter 88 times. Max Carey was again the best base runner, with 58 stolen bases to his credit. Eddie Roush made the most sacrifice hits, 33. Charley Hollocher of the Cubs led in the number of safe hits, with 130. Heinie Groh led in number of two-base hits, with 28; Jake Daubert made the most three-baggers, 15, while old Cactus Cravath of the Phillies was the home-run king of the league, with 8 circuit smashes.

Based solely on the season's averages the strongest batting club would consist of Bressler, Cincinnati, pitcher; O'Farrell, Chicago, catcher; Daubert, Brooklyn, first base; Fisher, St. Louis, second base; Groh, Cincinnati, third base; Hollocher, Chicago, shortstop; Southworth, Pittsburgh, Z. Wheat, Brooklyn, Roush, Cincinnati, outfielders.

The batting averages of the players who hit better than 258 and better are:

No Opposition Is Expected to Re-election of Present Officeholders.

Major Graeme M. Hammond, President of the New York Athletic Club, who has been attached to the Army Medical Corps since this country entered the war, will, in all proability, be re-elected to the premier office of the Mercury Foot organization when the annual election is held, Jan. 14. This was indicated yesterday, when the nominations for offices were made public. According to a prominent member of the club, little opposition will be encountered to the re-election of all of the present office holders.

It is understood that there has been general satisfaction with the conduct of the club's affairs throughout the last year, and this, according to the officials who have been active in the war work of the club, will preclude any possibility of opposition to the present incumbents.

Through an oversight no regular ticket was submitted by the Nominating Committee this year. At the time the nominations should have been posted, early in November, the news that the armistice had been signed caused everybody to forget everything else but the momentous news of the time. Under the constitution of the New York Athletic Club, as amended in 1912, twenty-five members can submit a list of nominations for offices. Since this was not done it is taken as an indication that the members are satisfied with the club's conduct under the supervision of the present officers. The lack of regularly subscribed nominations, however, gives the present office holders the characterization of independent nominations.

For the Board of Governors three new names have been submitted. They are Rudolph O. Harbold, W. C. Poertner, and Arthur H. Pogson.

The present office holders, in addition to Major Hammond, are: Vice President, Jeremiah T. Mahoney; Treasurer, Matthew S. Paine; Secretary, Frederick R. Fortmeyer; Captain, Arthur McAleenan; Board of Governors, to serve two years, W. A. Delehanty, William H. Selach, M. F. Loughman, William A. Hines, Freemont Spicer, Matthew P. Halpin, Arthur Teele, Jr., and Charles H. Pond.

SPEAR LOSES AT BILLIARDS.

Defeated by Gardner in Tournament Match, 150 to 94.

George Spear, metropolitan Class C 18.2 balkline billiard champion, lost his first game of the title tournament at the Broadway Academy last night, when he was defeated by Gus Gardner. The score was 150 to 94. Gardner completed his string in thirty-seven innings for an average of 4 2-37 and had a high run of 19. Spear had a high run of 19 and averaged 2 22-36.

Spear displayed a remarkable reversal of form. He failed to approach the standard of play he has shown in his three previous games, and at no time was he a dangerous contender. The balls refused to respond to his stroke, so that he was unable to gather them favorably for a substantial run. Gardner, on the other hand, surprised the spectators with his brilliant playing and always maintained a comparatively same lead on the champion. The result places Spear in a tie with Louis A. Servatius for the leadership. Each has won three games and lost one. This evening John Low will oppose C. Steinbugler.

WALDRON WINS WITH CUE.

W. Waldron defeated F. Griffith last night at Doyle's Billiard Academy in the English amateur championship tournament by a score of 250 to 140, in twenty innings. Waldron made a high break of 81, the highest of the touranment. Waldron is tied with A. Jordan for first place, both having won five games and lost none.

In the three-cushion tournament C. Maxwell won the first game from G. La Rue by a score of 25 to 22 in forty-two innings. Each player made a high break of 5. The second game was won by F. Scudder over B. Snow in fifty-one innings by 25 to 22, both men making high breaks of 3. By taking this game Scudder made it six straight.

Curling Expert Going Abroad.

Michael P. Flanagan, of Hibbing, Minn., a noted devotee of curling and one of the best players of the game in the country, is going abroad as a Knights of Columbus secretary. Mr. Flanagan, who recently was elected President of the Hibbing Curling Club, has curled in games with veterans like E. J. Rochou, William Whalen, Clarence Jackson, and Robert Dunbar. These men are known wherever the game is played.

PLAN INDOOR MEET FOR COLLEGE TEAMS

Cornell Will Be Asked to Join Yale, Dartmouth, and Pennsylvania in Track Carnival.

Cornell is to be asked to take part in the proposed indoor track and field carnival, preliminary plans for which have been made known by Horace Pender, graduate manager of athletics at Dartmouth. According to Mr. Pender's scheme for the meet, Cornell, Dartmouth, Pennsylvania, and Yale will constitute the quartet of teams which will hold a meet to make up for the intercollegiate indoor relay carnival canceled because of war conditions.

The proposed meet will be held in an armory and a committee headed by a Dartmouth graduate will shortly visit the available armories in the city with a view to determining which is best adapted for a meet. If possible a full program of events will be run off with the addition of one or more relay races.

If the meet proves to be a success it may be the forerunner of a new style of indoor intercollegiate competition. The indoor meet fostered by the I. C. A. A. A. A. was determined upon a team basis and no individual entries in the separate events were received. The purpose of this was to develop team spirit and a college which scored on a team basis the best average in the 100-yard dash, for example, was adjudged the winner of that event. The same method of scoring was applied to all events. In the four cornered meet the plan followed will be that used in the intercollegiate outdoor championships, with individual competition in the various events and team competition for a point trophy.

High School Meet Jan. 25.

It was definitely announced yesterday that the annual high schools indoor track and field championships would be held under the auspices of the Public Schools Athletic League at the Twenty-second Regiment Armory, Jan. 25.

TITLE RUNNERS IN RACE.

Charles Pores, national five and ten-mile running champion, and Max Bohland of the Paulist A. C., cross-country runner, will clash in an endurance test in Philadelphia tomorrow morning. The two title holders are scheduled to start from scratch in the seventh annual running of the Wood Block road race, one of the outdoor fixtures in Philadelphia athletic activities.

Pores and Bohland will be the honor runners in a field of 100 who have entered for the annual chase. This field is the most representative in the history of the event. In addition to the national title holders, Metropolitan and Middle Atlantic A. A. U. champions have entered, including practically every distance runner of note in the East. Among the other prominent runners are Jimmy Henigan, formerly of Boston, last year's cross-country champion; Louis Kaufman, Brooklyn A. A., local hill and dale champion; Joseph Schwartz and W. N. Cummings, both of the Meadowbrook Club of Philadelphia. These athletes are expected to give Pores and Bohland their hardest competition. Frank Wendling of Buffalo and Robert Spear, former Cornell distancer, are also expected to occupy contending positions. Spear will be making his first open appearance as a member of the Paulist A. C.

Six local organizations have nominated teams for the point trophy, making the largest team entry the race has ever received from New York. The clubs are Morningside A. C., Mohawk A. C., Paulist A. C., Brooklyn A. A., Pelham Bay N. T. S., and Fordham S. A. T. C. Other local organizations will be represented by individual entries. The Meadowbrook Club of Philadelphia has entered a team which carried off the Middle Atlantic junior and senior cross-country championships.

It is expected that the struggle for the point prize will result in a hard battle between the New York and Philadelphia clubs. The record for the course of about six miles, is twenty-six minutes, made four years ago by Nick Gianakopolus, the sturdy Greek runner of the Millrose A. A., who is now in France.

DEMPSEY DROPS SMITH.

HOWARD BERRY RETURNS.

Penn's All-Around Star Likely to Retire from Athletics.

Lieutenant Howard Berry, star all-around athlete, of the University of Pennsylvania has been mustered out of the military service, it was learned yesterday, and has returned to his home in Philadelphia. The all-around star has been stationed with an artillery regiment at Camp Hancock, Ga.

Lieutenant Berry, it is said, will re-enter Pennsylvania, probably during the semester commencing with the New Year. However, it is regarded as extremely doubtful, if he will ever again be seen competing under the university's colors. It is said that Lieutenant Berry is ineligible to compete on the Red and Blue track team.

Lieutenant Berry has attracted nation-wide attention as an athlete since entering the University of Pennsylvania. The all-around star entered Penn from Muhlenberg after completing a year of baseball and football competition at the latter institution. When he had rounded out his year's residence at Penn he became eligible for all branches of sports. Subsequently he distinguished himself for a period of two years on the football and baseball teams and the track and field team. On the latter team he twice won the pentathlon championships.

Kieran Wins Skating Race.

James Kieran of the Palace Skating Club won the one-mile handicap race at the 181st Street Ice Palace last night. Kieran had a handicap of forty yards, and did the mile in 3:11. Joe Moore, scratch man, was second, and Al Bach third. The half-mile novice event was won by W. Scallon of the Palace Skating Club in 1:46, W. Dix of Brooklyn was second, and W. Brachtel was third.

Dull Day in Gray Goods.

Seasonable dullness marked the local gray goods market yesterday. Perhaps the most noticeable sign was the increase in offerings by first hands. Thus 39-inch 68-72s were offered at 14¾ cents and 38½-inch 64-60s at 12¼ cents, with a possibility that less might be taken. Of actual sales of printcloths there were not many, nor were there any of especial note. A few sales were reported of Eastern 27-inch 56-52s at 7¼ cents, and of 38½-inch 44-40s at 8¼ cents. There were some inquiries for sheetings, but buyers did not seem inclined to pay the prices asked.

Laces and Embroideries Used.

With the change in the trend of fashions, laces and embroideries are becoming more in demand. It is said by firms in this trade that when it is possible to obtain a sufficient quantity of these goods from Europe they will be used even more largely. Imitation filet laces are now being used very extensively on women's waists and undergarments, and the call for embroideries for use in dresses is gradually increasing.

Some New and Attractive Hats.

Attention is called in the bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America to some new and attractive hats shown by manufacturers. Among them is one four-pointed, the top of which is of taupe georgette and the facing of henna straw. It is trimmed with a stripped quill in henna. One-inch faille silk ribbon is also used to make some very smart ribbon hats. One is a large mushroom poke in peacock blue and sand, with the trimming consisting of a worsted rose. Burnt ostrich, especially in black, is shown extensively on turbans and close-fitting models.

Crockery and Glassware Lines.

While the tendency in the crockery and glassware lines has been for buyers to be rather shy in placing orders for the new year, because of an impression that prices will be lower, manufacturers are looking forward to a good season. Their attitude is based on the fact that sales at retail have been quite large, and that, consequently, stocks in the hands of dealers are small and need replenishing. In all kinds of chinaware there are to be no new patterns for the new season. A number of the makers of glassware are to have their annual exhibition at Pittsburgh for the fortnight beginning Jan. 13, when their samples will be shown.

Spring Clothing to Cost More.

Clothing salesmen who returned from their trips some weeks ago reported fairly large stocks on the shelves of the retailers. But it is believed that these were reduced considerably in the course of the holiday buying, which was big in most localities. The orders taken were affected somewhat by the high prices for the Spring offerings, which were necessitated by the corresponding levels of fabrics and the increases in wages which have had to be paid. Whatever reductions in prices, if any, are to come are not expected to materialize before the next heavyweight season. Retailers are a little apprehensive how the public will take to the prices for Spring and Summer wear.

Still Working on Back Orders.

The last season was an exceptionally good one for manufacturers of silk underwear, and, according to firms in this trade, the prospects for the Spring are even better. Owing to the demand for these garments from retail sources it was impossible for the manufacturers to fill all of the orders that were received, and some of the firms are still working on back orders. Many last minute calls were received, and the day after Christmas the stocks in one of the local stores had been reduced to such an extent that it was necessary to send its goods by messengers.

Petticoat Business Increases.

According to manufacturers of petticoats, the amount of business obtained during the past season more than met their expectations. The call for these goods of both the local and out-of-town stores was so large that in a number of cases the stocks were very badly depleted. During the latter part of last week, and even yesterday, buyers were in the city and placed large orders for immediate delivery. Of late there has been a decided increase in the sale of petticoats for evening wear, especially those made of crêpe de chine and wash satin trimmed with lace and ribbons.

Good Prospects for Spring.

For the Spring season the outlook for the sale of women's tailored waists is very promising. One of the manufacturers who is showing his line among the local stores received an opening order for waists of this kind which amounted to $4,800 on eight numbers. Reports received by manufacturers from salesmen who are on the Pacific Coast are very encouraging. In the new lines stripes and checks with high, low, and convertible collars are offered in many pleasing effects.

"Coal to Newcastle" Again.

Nennette and Rintintin, the little lucky pair which have circulated all through France and to the very front line of the war trenches, as mascots, are dancing all over the lining of a coat which Mrs. Wilson has taken abroad with her and which will everywhere accompany the Presidential party. In wearing this lining in her coat Mrs. Wilson breaks all records in "carrying coal to Newcastle." The silk is American made and designed, is selling in New York shops, and is being carried back to France, the home of fine silks and of Nennette and Rintintin. The silk sells at $4.50 a yard and is used chiefly for linings. These come in different colors, chiefly the darker shades. The silk chosen by Mrs. Wilson is a dark blue, and Nennette and Rintintin are in lighter blues and reds.

Bonuses Help White Sales.

To the comparatively recent custom of giving bonuses in business houses is credited the success of some of the white sales now going on by the houses where giving them during the holiday season is something of an innovation. "Wall Street and so many business houses now give bonuses about Christmas," said one of the head men in one of these houses, "that the women have money to spend on something besides Christmas presents. Why, take our own house. Bonuses amounting to over $20,000 were given this year. Any one who had been in the employ of the firm for two weeks received $7, those who had been here five years $25, and so on. Our white sale, which as a rule we would not hold until after the first of January, we started in between Christmas and New Years to brighten things up, and people have been buying well the plain things like sheets and pillowcases, Turkish towels, &c."

URGES INCREASED BUILDING

Secretary Wilson Sends Message to Massachusetts Conference.

BOSTON, Dec. 30.—An appeal for the immediate resumption of roadbuilding, public works, and construction in general throughout the United States is contained in a message sent by William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, to a conference of State officials and industrial representatives at the State House today. Secretary Wilson had expected to attend the conference, but as he was unable to reach here in time, he incorporated his views in a telegram to Roger W. Babson, who represented him. The message read in part:

"Deferred construction is really a part of our war debt. It should be one of the first accounts to be paid unless the country is to remain in a state of arrested development. Inasmuch as the building industry is regarded by many as the means of facilitating the general industrial transition from a war to a peace basis, it should have the encouragement of all interests. For ultimately all industries must suffer and prosper alike.

"The main reason why civil construction is held up is because the public has been instinctively educated against it. Other factors which are retarding the recovery of the industry are difficulty of obtaining capital; the uncertainty of the market as regards supply and distribution of capital and labor, and the problems of price, supply, and irregular and expensive transportation of building material.

"May we not overcome these difficulties, in a measure at least, and through a definite re-education, shape mass public psychology throughout the country into a strong attitude which will favor public works, schools, ships, and private construction of certain types, at least?

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Million-Share Day Brings Decline in Rail Stocks—Another Bond Record Day.

The expansion of dealings which occurred in yesterday's stock and bond market contained an element of surprise, particularly in reference to stocks. The turnover exceeded a million shares for the first time since the second week of Novmber, and for the first half of the day the demand appeared to almost equal the pressure of sales. A change occurred in the afternoon, however, when many of the railroad issues were in extensive supply, and the net result of the session's operations was a rather substantial decline. The bond market, which had been establishing new high records for activity for several consecutive days, again reached a total never before attained in the history of the Stock Exchange.

The sale of close to $45,000,000 in bonds in a single day is truly amazing when considered in contrast with the markets which preceded the distribution of $17,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds. These issues quite naturally supplied the bulk of transactions, and while offerings were on a great scale all the way along, the net declines were not very large and two of the group gained ground. The fourth 4¼s touched a new low price at 94, afterward recovering somewhat. It was natural that dealings in the latest issues should exceed those of the earlier offerings, for not only was the output the greatest of the four, but the bonds also have not become as firmly lodged with the investing public as those which preceded the Fourth loan.

In the stock market it was noted that some of the higher priced railroad shares were under more pressure than the others. More than likely the statement of railroad earnings and profits during October, issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission, had a considerable effect on market sentiment. Gross earnings of $489,332,000 were about a million dollars higher than in September, and nearly $7,000,000 in excess of October last year. Operating expenses, however, increased $23,300,000 over October, 1917, and were close to $13,000,000 higher than in September this year. These figures pointed toward a greater deficit for the calendar year than had been estimated last August, after freight rate increases helped to bolster up the net revenue. The October balance after taxes and rental adjustments was no more than $87,100,000, a decline of $15,600,000 as compared with the same month of the preceding year, and of about $12,000,000 from the September total. While the report was hardly encouraging, there was some satisfaction to be acquired from particular items of outlay. For maintenance of equipment, as an example, $55,000,000 more was spent than in the month of October, 1917. A deduction to be derived from this was that, high prices notwithstanding, the Government is seeking to improve the physical condition of transportation facilities. The outlay for roadbed, bridges, &c., was $23,000,000 higher than in October, 1917, and $3,600,000 more than in September of this year.

Further attention was drawn to the Russian outlook by sharp reactions in Russian bonds and currency. Call money was firm at 6 per cent., and preparations being made by the corporations for Jan. 1 disbursements necessitated a renewal of operations by the "Money Pool." It was reported that some $30,000,000 was lent from this joint fund of the banks.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Standard of N. J. Moves Upward.

Another sharp advance in the stock of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was recorded yesterday. There was a rise of 36 points, from 664, the closing price on Saturday, to 700, on trading involving 140 shares. Last week the stock advanced 75 points, so that the rise in the last six trading days has been 112 points. Reports yesterday were to the effect that the stock was decidedly scarce, some brokers saying that they could not execute customers' orders. The advance in this stock is reported to be connected with the bringing in of a $50,000-barrel well in the Chinampa district of Mexico by the Transcontinental Petroleum Company, a subsidiary of the Carter Oil Company, which is the operating concern of the Standard of New Jersey in Mexico. Other oil stocks were strong, Texas and Pacific Coal and Oil Company selling as high as 1,625, an advance of 125 points over the close on Saturday. A week ago the stock was selling at 1,200. A gain of 11 points in the Standard Oil Company of California was also recorded.

Last Day to Establish Losses.

Much of the trading in yesterday's heavy market was attributed to selling so that losses might be established for the present year in anticipation of income tax returns. Sales today must be settled for tomorrow, the last day of the old year. Providing there is any selling for such a purpose today the obligation would be settled on Jan. 2, which would bring it into the New Year and would therefore not accomplish the purpose intended. There has never been any ruling on this point by the Treasury Department, the inclination being to accept conditions as they are established by the Stock Exchange itself.

Export Brass Company.

Reports yesterday were to the effect that the brass manufacturers and other companies which make copper rods, wire and the like were planning to form an export organization under the Webb bill. Several informal conferences to this end are said to have been held, and it is believed that the new concern will follow in organization the type which was adopted by the Copper Export Association. Concerns which are mentioned as being ready to enter the company are said to be the American Brass Company, Bridgeport Brass Company, National Conduit and Cable Company, and possibly the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, which is a large producer of copper rods and wire.

A Year on the Small Board.

According to the report of the Consolidated Stock Exchange for the year up to today, transactions amounted to 11,767,054 shares, as compared with 20,266,443 in 1917, the banner year in the history of that Exchange. This decrease is attributed to the loan restrictions which were enforced drastically in the last quarter. The successful flotation of billions in Liberty Bonds and increased taxation, together with restrictive Governmental policies, are also considered to have had an effect in lessening activity. The report says that the year has been marked by increased trading in all kinds of odd lots.

Railroad Earnings.

Several bright spots in the report of railroad earnings of a number of companies appeared yesterday in the records compiled for the month of November. Increases in net operating income were recorded by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, Union Pacific, Père Marquette, New York, Chicago & St. Louis, and Chicago Great Western. In the case of Union Pacific there was recorded a net operating income for eleven months of $33,542,815, an increase for this period of the year of $8,514,706. New York, Chicago & St. Louis also showed a gain for the eleven months' period amounting to $1,188,677.

Early Pressure of Slight Result.

The stock market presented the unusual spectacle up to the noon hour yesterday of business running on a million-share scale without much advantage being scored by either the bear or bull side. The last preceding million-share day was on Nov. 12, when the signing of the armistice produced a great deal of enthusiasm on the buying side and prices moved up with considerable vigor. In yesterday's dealings the weight of selling finally made its influence felt, and it was noted in the afternoon that a number of standard old-line railroad issues were among the easiest to melt away.

DISCUSS B. R. T. FINANCING.

Bankers and Road's Officials Study Ways of Raising New Funds.

There were several conferences yesterday in the financial district between officials of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company and bankers on the question of obtaining new funds for the company to meet several obligations which fall due about the first of the new year. After the last conference a Director of the company said that new money was required by Jan. 1 to meet the interest on the $57,000,000 7 per cent. notes and to meet other requirements. He also said that the conferences had developed nothing of a positive character. Further conferences are expected today.

It is also understood that the question of raising the necessary funds through the issuance of securities was discussed at the meeting, and that while some of those at the meeting favored this method, there were others who did not approve it as the best means to raise money at this time and in this investment market. The latter, it is understood, favor bank loans as the most favorable way of immediate Brooklyn Rapid Transit financing.

The company has added extensive improvements to its system in the last few years, and the question of the funding of these was also a subject of discussion. Increases in wages, operating costs, and materials were also talked over, and will probably bear a part in the conferences which are expected to be held today.

The question of an increase in the fare rates is also understood to have been one of the items taken up yesterday, and while the raising of new moneys through the issuing of securities and bank loans was suggested, it was intimated last night that some of the conferees insisted that an immediate increase in fares would serve to ease a delicate situation.

Fare increases, not alone for Brooklyn Rapid Transit but for all of the traction companies in the Greater City, are being urged by bankers and utility specialists generally. They say that with sufficient additional revenue from this source many of the companies would be able to see light in a situation which has looked dark for them for some months.

COTTON RISES, THEN BREAKS

Brisk Demand Is Followed by Reselling by Early Buyers.

Trading was brisk, and the demand for the staple very good in the early part of yesterday's cotton market. The good tone of the morning session was attributed to strong Liverpool cables indicating a sharp rise in contracts in that market. This feature, with further trade buying here, which caused fresh covering of shorts, and renewed speculative buying by local operators, carried prices up 45 to 50 points for the present crop options. On this bulge the high prices of the day were scored, January selling up to 30.45c., March 29c., May 28.10c. and July 27.47c. Trade demand slackened around the noon hour and the market reacted on some fresh Southern selling. In the afternoon session there was a sharp break in prices for all contracts, influenced to considerable extent by reselling by early buyers, and stop-loss orders on long cotton, which had accumulated over Sunday. The levels reached in this liquidation brought the list down 65 to 105 points under Saturday's closing quotations, January going to 29.30c., March 27.85c., May 26.85c., July 26.04c., and 23.60c. for October of the new crop.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 9,994 packages. Just a little more fresh stock offering than the trade requires and prices eased off ½c, with an unsettled feeling at the close. Buyers always operate cautiously at this time of the year, and this is the main cause of the weakness. The accumulation is chiefly of medium qualities, including perhaps a dozen cars of centralized butter, worth from 65c to 67c. Renovated, ladles, and packing stock unchanged. Creamery, higher than extras, a pound, 68½@69c; extras, (92 score,) 68c; firsts, (88 to 91 score,) 63½@67½c; seconds, (83 to 87 score,) 59@62½c; lower grades, 53@58c; unsalted, higher than extras, 70½@71c; extras, 69½@70c; firsts, 65@69c; seconds, 60@64½c; State dairy, tubs, good to prime, 62@65c; common to fair, 52@61c; renovated, extras, 53@54c; firsts, 50@52c; lower grades, 43@48c; imitation creamery, firsts, 47@48c; ladles, current make, firsts, 44@45c; seconds, 43c; lower grades, 41@42½c; packing stock, current make, No. 1, 42½@43c; No. 2, 41½c; lower grades, 36@40½c.

EGGS.—8,608 cases. Arrivals are still showing some increase, and while advices of shipments in transit are conflicting they generally indicate a fair supply for the near future, and there are already considerable accumulations under shippers' limits. The reserved offerings are holding the market firm, but there is little change in the range of values. Storage eggs of moderate cost and useful quality are wanted beyond the supply available. Nearby white eggs are quite plentiful and are still chiefly of mixed quality and irregular value. Fancy large, chalk white, new laid henneries meet a limited demand at sustained prices. Under grades irregular. Some further sales of fancy Petaluma whites at 85c, but most of the California white eggs here are of less desirable quality and not moving hardly enough to establish any reliable quotations. Fresh gathered, extras, a dozen, 67@68c; extra firsts, 65@66c; firsts, 64c; seconds, 60@63c; dirties, No. 1, 55@57c; No. 2 and poorer, 48@54c; checks, good to choice, dry, 46@48c; under grades, 42@45c; refrigerator, 40@54c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby Western hennery whites, fine to fancy, 82@85c; ordinary to prime, 70@80c; gathered whites, ordinary to fine, 70@82c; pullet whites, 68@72c; Pacific Coast whites, extras, 85c; lower grades, 75@80c; pullets, 65@70c; Western and Southern, gathered whites, 66@80c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery, browns, 70@72c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 63@68c.

MONEY COMMITTEE TO STAY

An agreement between the Treasury Department at Washington and the Money Committee of bankers, it was announced yesterday at the Federal Reserve Bank, had been reached whereby the Money Committee would continue its operation in aid of Government financing and in curtailing the expansion of loan accounts. The Money Committee would automatically have ceased functioning on Jan. 10, but it was deemed wise to confer with the Treasury Department on the matter with the result that the committee may continue to exercise a directing power over money and the stabilizing of rates on the New York Stock Exchange at least until the close of the forthcoming Liberty Loan, and perhaps for even a longer time.

> In view of the approach of the time when the arrangement on the part of the banks to furnish money for the purpose of stabilizing rates on Stock Exchange loans would expire by limitation, namely Jan. 10, 1919, it was deemed wise by the Sub-Committee on Money of the Liberty Loan Committee to confer with the officials of the Treasury, that their wishes as to an extension of the present arrangement might be known.
> Such conference was had, and the Treasury has written as follows:
> "The Treasury requests the Sub-Committee on Money of the Liberty Loan Committee to continue its operations in aid of the Government's financial requirements, on the one hand to prevent an increase in the rate for call money, and on the other hand to prevent expansion of the loan account."
> Acting in accordance with the expressed wish of the Treasury, the Sub-Committee on Money has arranged with the banks to continue the present arrangement and has arranged with the authorities of the Stock Exchange that they shall continue to exercise control to prevent expansion of the aggregate loan account.

In contradistinction to the easy rates which prevailed for call money last week, there was a firmness yesterday, 6 per cent. being the rate demanded for accommodation on mixed collateral. The demand was greater than the supply, corporations being heavy borrowers of funds for meeting interest and dividend payments due the first of the coming year. In consequence of this heavy demand the money pool, which has been rather inactive of late, was called into action, and funds to the amount of about $30,000,000, it is reported, were loaned.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Net losses from a fraction to more than a point were recorded at the close of an active market yesterday on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. With the exception of the opening, when substantial advances were made, the market throughout the session was irregular in movement, with an undertone nervous and unsettled. Occasional rallies made for fractional improvement, but lacked power to absorb the volume of selling orders. Prices at the close were about the low levels of the day.

U. S. MARSHAL'S NOTICE.

POSTPONED SALE.

U. S. MARSHAL'S SALE.—I will sell at public auction on Friday, January 3rd, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon, the Steamboat "Chrystenah," her engines, &c., said steamboat to be sold at the foot of 157th Street and North River, New York City, N. Y., where she can now be inspected.

THOMAS D. McCARTHY,
U. S. Marshal, S. D. N. Y.
Dated New York, December 27, 1918.

REAL ESTATE FIELD

A New York investor contributed to the activity of the realty market yesterday by purchasing in the midtown zone the seven-story loft building at 9 and 11 East Sixteenth Street, between Broadway and Fifth Avenue. It covers a plot fronting 50 feet by 92 feet deep, and was sold by the Gylmann Realty Company, being the first change in ownership in fourteen years. The property was held at 140,000. The building returns $15,000 per year on leases. The new owner is planning substantial improvements. Harry B. Cutner acted as broker in the transaction. The buyer was represented by M. S. & I. S. Isaacs as attorneys.

$700,000 Mortgage on 50 Wall Street.

The National City Company, which recently purchased the six-story bank building at 50 Wall Street, adjoining the southeast corner of William Street, fronting 49.1 feet by 120 and irregular, from the Metals and Mechanics' National Bank, took title to the property yesterday and obtained a mortgage of $700,000 from the Dry Dock Savings Institution. The property is assessed at $1,000,000, of which $850,000 is land value.

J. E. R. Carpenter Buys Another Apartment House Site.

J. E. R. Carpenter, architect and builder, who has been identified with a number of big apartment house operations in the most exclusive sections of Manhattan, has purchased a group of five five-story flats on the northeast corner of Sixth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street. They were acquired from Mary J. Odell, who held them at $275,000.

The property is known as 978 to 984 Sixth Avenue and 75-77 West Fifty-fifth Street, and consists of five flats with stores fronting on the avenue and one similar house on the street. The combined properties have a frontage of 100 feet on each thoroughfare and were taken by Mr. Carpenter on a cash basis. Harold L. Lewis and James Boyd were the brokers in the transaction.

Last month Mr. Carpenter purchased the seventy-five-foot plot at 115 and 117 East Eighty-second Street as a site for a high-class apartment house, to be erected when building conditions in the city become more favorable from a material standpoint than they are at present.

Investor Buys Marion Apartments Held at $300,000.

The nine-story Marion apartment house, at 2,612 and 2,614 Broadway, has been sold by the Henry Morgenthau Company to an investing client of Sharp & Co. The structure, which occupies a plot 45.11 by 125, located 55 feet south of Ninety-ninth Street, was held at about $300,000.

It was built about fifteen years ago by Thomas Healy, restaurateur, and was held as an investment by him until last year, when he gave it, together with other realty holdings, to the Morgenthau Company in part payment for the Astor market property at the southwest corner of Broadway and Ninty-fifth Street, which he converted into a restaurant and theatre.

Three Heights Apartments Involved in Pending Deal.

Negotiations are pending for the sale of the three six-story apartment houses, 21, 31, and 41 Bennett Avenue, owned by the Bennett Avenue Realty Company, Patrick H. McNulty, President, which erected the structures a few years ago. They are fully tenanted. Bennett Hall, the southerly house, stands on a plot 88.6 by 100; Holmes Court is on a site 93.5 by 100, and Wendell Hall occupies a plot 104.7 by 100.

Private Dwelling Sales.

James H. Cruikshank, operator, sold to Ross Rothvart the three-story private residence at 39 West Ninety-second Street, on a plot 20 by 100. Assessed by the city at $17,000. Warren & Skillen were the brokers in the transaction.

An investor purchased from John M. McGuiness 233 East Forty-ninth Street, a three-story dwelling on a lot 18 by 100.5.

Buyers for Tenements.

In the Greenwich Village section, 41 Jane Street, a five-story brownstone, cold-water tenement, held by William S. Bogert for over twenty years, has been sold to Joseph H. Gilman of this city. Crist & Herrick negotiated the sale.

Louisa M. Pollock of Pittsfield, Mass., is the buyer of the six-story tenement, 444 East Houston Street.

The Bronx Market.

The estate of Susan M. Weir sold to Frederick Brown, operator, 2,608, 2,612 and 2,616 Briggs Avenue, three five-story apartments on a plot 120 by 85, held at $120,000. This completes the sale of a row of five houses recently taken in exchange by the Weir estate for the Stockton apartments at 155th Street and St. Nicholas Avenue, which has also been resold. Nehring Bros. negotiated the transaction.

The North County Development Company, Charles F. Deshler, President, sold 941 and 945 Washington Avenue, 35 feet north of 163d Street, two six-story apartment houses with stores, on plot 75 by 100, to an investor. Mr. Deshler purchased these houses in November from the Rice Fitzgerald Building Company. J. Clarence Davies and Samuel Cowen negotiated the sale.

Queens Borough Sales.

The Exempt Firemen's Association of the Rockaways has purchased from M. McKennee the improved plot 24 by 155 on the north side of Norton's Lane west of the Rockaway Boulevard, Far Rockaway, which will be used as headquarters for the association in the Rockaways. The price was $12,000.

C. Copp has purchased from E. Fassett the plot 75 by 249 on the south side of West Grove Street east of Lawrence Street, Flushing.

Recent Buyers.

Joseph H. Choate, son of the late Ambassador to England, is the buyer of the two private dwellings 10 and 12 East Ninety-fourth Street sold last week. It is the intention of the buyer to alter the two houses, which occupy a plot 40 by 100, into one large American basement structure.

Commercial Leases.

The Cross & Brown Company has sold the lease of Charles E. Reiss & Co. Inc., on the building at 1,741 Broadway to Frank McAllister, and have subleased the store and basement at 1,761 Broadway to the Eastern Car Distributors, Inc., New York representative of the Saxon Motor Car and Jumbo Truck.

The same brokers have also leased the building at 20 West Twenty-third Street for Charles F. Ayer to the Widman & Kaufman Company.
